Is It Alien or Human?

(only the Geneticists know for sure and they disagree)

By Bill Knell

A tiny body was discovered in the village of Kaolinovy, Russia, on August 13, 1996. The village is located on the eastern slope of the Ural Mountains near the town of Kyshtym in the Chelyabinsk Oblast (an Oblast is a federal region administrated by Russia). Due to poor or sensationalized press courage at that time, the actual story of the discovery varies. According to an article published by Pravda-On-line, the best account comes from Major (Ret.) Vladimir Bendlin, a former investigator with the police department of Kyshtym.

Bendlin claims that Police detained Vladimir Nurtdinov during the summer of 1996 on suspicion of stealing some electrical wire. Nurtdinov was carrying a bundle thought to contain some of the wire. When it was examined, the bundle was found to contain a red cloth with the remains of a tiny body inside. Police videotaped the cloth and the body. During that process, Bendlin casually commented on how much the body looked like an alien from a science fiction movie.

Bendlin opened an investigation and approached the only physician he could find on duty later that day. Igor Uskov was an Urologist with the local hospital. Uskov laughed when he heard Bendlin's alien explanation for the creature and countered with one of his own. The doctor was certain this was a twenty-week-old fetus and later confirmed that theory by having it examined by Irina Ermolayeva, a prominent gynecologist. She also agreed that the body looked like a fetus and added that it had probably been expelled during a miscarriage or an illegal abortion.

Things changed when Stanislav Samoshkin, chief of morbid anatomy at Kyshtym Hospital got involved. After performing an autopsy, he declared the body to be neither human nor animal. His primary argument centered on the fact that a human skull consists of six bones, while this one had four. Although his opinion was in the minority, it set off a firestorm of publicity.

As journalists and a television crew from Japan arrived in town offering cash for interviews, the original arrest story morphed into something completely different. The new story involved a woman who found the creature alive in a cemetery on the outskirts of Kaolinovy in the middle of the night. Tamara Vasilievna Prosvirina said she felt compelled to go to the cemetery by a voice in her head. The woman often went there during the day to gather flowers placed on graves. Known for her bizarre behavior in the village, Prosvirina described the creature as a 'child' that had large eyes, no ears, could not talk and 'whistled' to get her attention. She said that she brought the creature back to her apartment.

Other paid witnesses said they came to Prosvirina's apartment and saw the gray-skinned creature alive. Because of her bizarre behavior and often-outrageous claims, Prosvirina was reported to medical authorities which took her into custody for her own safety. Although Prosvirina and her neighbors claim that the authorities were told about a 'child' in the house as they took her away, they ignored the warning and left. With no one to feed the 'child,' it died. The neighbors failed to explain why they did not remove the 'child' or make an effort to feed it.

Enter Vladimir Nurdinov who was later arrested by Major Bendlin. Although he never mentioned any connection to Prosvirina when he was originally arrested, Nurdinov came up with a whole new account after being paid for his story. In the new version, he was a friend of Prosvirina and knew about her the 'child' she found in the cemetery. Knowing the 'child' was left alone in her apartment, he went there and found it dead in her bedroom. He removed the body and brought it to his home.

Nurdinov's account of what happened next differs from Bendlin's report. Nurdinov claims that the police came to his home to question him about electrical wire he was accused of stealing in the village of Novogorny. When they found the tiny body, they thought it might be the mummified remains of a child and took it away. Nurdinov made no mention of his arrest.

From that point on things went downhill as far as the truth is concerned. Claiming a Police Investigator contacted her; UFO Researcher Galina Semenkova traveled about one hundred and forty miles from Kamensk-Uralsky to investigate. She is head of the Star Academy UFO-Contact in Zolotov Method organization. Claiming she received the remains of the creature from a Police Investigator, she headed back to Kamensk-Uralsky. On the way back, she says that Aliens from a flying saucer confronted her and demanded the body.

According to the Japanese Television Crew, the body was already missing when they arrived. However, they did not immediately speak to the Police just assumed someone in the town had it. This is confirmed by their cash offer of $200,000 to anyone in the town who could produce the body. No one could produce the body, but plenty of people described as 'bums and drunkards' by the Russian Press lined up to tell their story about the creature.

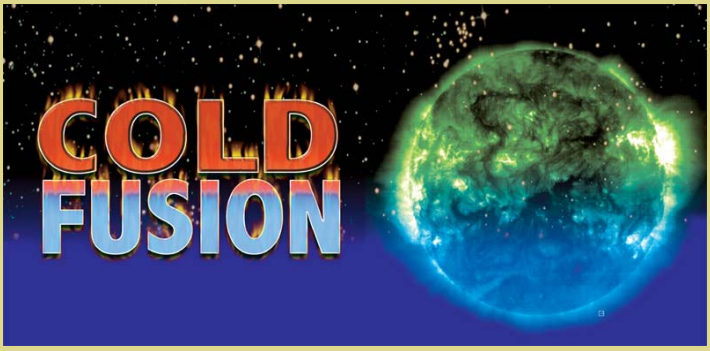
The cloth that Nurdinov claims he used to wrap the body found at Prosvirina's apartment has only added to this convoluted mystery. Although blood stains originally found on that red cloth were tested and found to be human, a report in the Russian Press in 2004 said that Vadim Chernobrov (a Moscow UFO researcher) claims that more recent tests show the creature had nothing in common with humans. No information was provided which makes clear what was tested, how or by whom to provide these amazing results.

Now yet another amazing revolution comes to us from Russia. According to a Pravda-On-Line article on 3/24/07, the Institute of Forensic Medicine in Moscow reports: "A gene discovered in the DNA samples doesn't correspond with any genes pertaining to humans or anthropoid apes," said Vadim Chernobrov, a coordinator with the public research center Kosmopoisk. "No gene samples available at the laboratory match the gene. The experts in DNA research haven't come across any creatures with such an elongated DNA molecule," Chernobrov added.

It's important to understand that none of this information or the claims being made come from the Russian Government. They seem to feel that the body was the result of a miscarriage or illegal abortion. There might also be a good explanation for the condition of the body. An accident at a nearby radioactive chemical plant in 1957 caused the area to be polluted with about half the amount of radioactive material released in Chernobyl during that accident. That amount would be more than enough to account for all sorts of genetic and other abnormalities for many years to come.

It's sad to see UFO researchers and the media focus on cases like these when so many former government employees and members of the military have come forward with first hand knowledge regarding the existence of Aliens and the cover-up of information related to the UFO Phenomenon.

SAUCERS&ALIENS



Unlike other so called "free energy" technologies, cold fusion refuses to die. The elite media have succeeded in burying other promising innovations, but this one keeps coming back from the grave. And the saga of its development tells us a great deal about the sad state of what passes for science in the world today.

To understand what this is all about, we need to take a look at nuclear power in the broad sense. Nuclear power plants today use atomic fission to produce heat to boil water into steam to turn turbines connected to dynamos that produce electricity. The usual fuel is uranium, a heavy element whose nuclei, struck by neutrons, fission into lighter elements and, in the process, release some of what physicists call their "binding energy." Natural uranium is composed mainly of two isotopes, chemically the same, but with different numbers of neutrons in their nuclei. By far the most common is U-238, which can be fissioned, but does not release more free neutrons, so it cannot, by itself, sustain a chain reaction. Mixed in is a small amount of U-235, which does release neutrons. To produce enough power to be really useful, the uranium must be enriched by separating out some of the U-238, which is then called depleted uranium, and has other uses. Left behind is a mixture with a higher percentage of U-235, and this is the reactor fuel. To make a bomb, it would have to be enriched a great deal more. Although technically more difficult, it is also possible to build breeder reactors that convert U-238 into plutonium, which will sustain a chain reaction, or they can be designed to convert the element thorium into the fissionable uranium isotope U-233.

Physicists have known for a long time that it is possible to release binding energy by fusing light nuclei into heavier ones, although it requires an immense amount of heat and pressure to do it. The Sun fuses ordinary hydrogen into helium, but this reaction releases energy at a very slow rate. The deuterium and tritium isotopes of hydrogen are used in the hydrogen bomb, and release energy at an acceptable rate. Beginning in the early nineteen fifties, a heavily funded effort began to develop controlled hydrogen fusion reactors for power, using electromagnetic confinement with powerful fields, or inertial confinement with high energy lasers. After over two generations and billions of tax dollars, the geniuses involved in this lucrative career have failed to make a reaction last longer than a fraction of a second or produce more than a tiny fraction of the energy they have to put into it. There has been time for the grand children of the original researchers to be working on the project, and some of them admit that it may be another fifty years before they even pass the break even point and produce more energy than they consume. Of course, even that would not mean that it was an economical energy source.

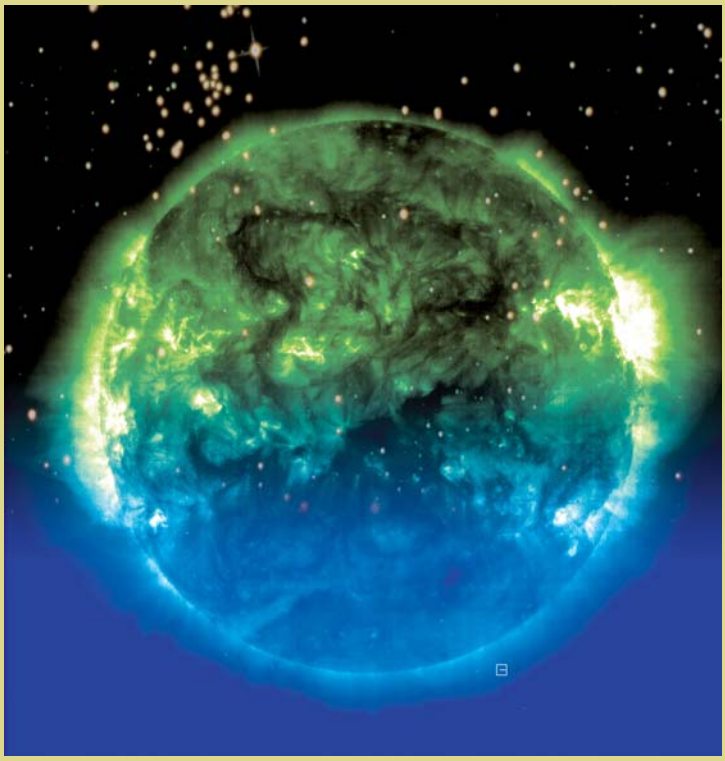
For complex theoretical reasons, some physicists have long suspected that it might be possible to achieve a fusion reaction at vastly lower temperatures, if deuterium nuclei were absorbed and trapped between the atoms of certain metals, but it was believed that very little energy could be produced this way. In 1927 a Swedish scientist named J. Tandberg claimed to have made helium from ordinary hydrogen, using palladium electrodes, but was unable to prove it.

Then, in 1989 (nineteen years ago) two lowly chemists at the University of Utah, Martin Fleischmann and Stanley Pons, claimed that they were doing an electrolysis of heavy water using palladium electrodes, and that the reaction produced excess heat energy. Now heavy water is deuterium oxide; ordinary hydrogen has a nucleus consisting of one proton; deuterium has a proton and a neutron; and tritium has a proton and two neutrons. Unable to find any other source for the excess energy, they attributed it to cold fusion. Bear in mind that measuring the energy (in this case, electricity) going into a small container in a laboratory and the energy coming out is a relatively simple and well understood procedure, and any scientists worth his salt will test and retest, average results, and make every effort to rule out experimental errors.



Predictably, they were immediately attacked, especially by the hot fusion researchers, whose profitable careers and reputations were on the line. The reaction allegedly produced far more excess energy than cold fusion could, in theory, produce. In addition, while it might seem that two deuterium nuclei (one proton and one neutron each) could happily fuse into one helium nucleus (two neutrons and two protons), theoretical models for cold fusion indicated that there would also be some tritium and some free neutrons, which Fleischmann and Pons did not detect. In addition, the energy should be released as high energy gamma rays, which were not present.

So the attacks were not entirely without justification. But they went far beyond reason, degenerating into personal attacks by mainstream scientists who seemed to feel that, if they could not understand something, it could not exist. This is arrogance and narrow mimdedness that has no place in true science. Researchers at MIT attacked them, and Dr. Koonin of Caltech and Dr. Douglas R.O. Morrison of CERN accused Fleischmann and Pons of incompetence and delusion. The attacks were so virulent, that Dr. Eugene Mallove accused MIT of a fraudulent attack to protect their own hot fusion research, and Nobel Laureate Julian Schwinger accused the debunkers of scientific censorship.

Yet, largely ignored by the controlled elite media, the results were being duplicated elsewhere. Researchers at Texas A&M detected excess heat energy, as did a team at Georgia Tech, although the latter had some doubts. In July, 1989, Dr. Oriani at the University of Minnesota claimed excess energy production. By 1991 ninety two different research groups stated that they had produced excess energy, and some, but not all, reported the production of helium or tritium, or neutrons. Some of these teams, used a gas discharge system rather than an electrolysis system. In 2002 a US Navy laboratory claimed to have produced excess energy with cold fusion, and this was duplicated by the US Department of Energy in 2004. Most recently, a team at Stanford Research Institute, using the electrolysis method coupled with a low energy laser, produced thirty times as much energy as they put into the reaction.

There are really several issues here. Given the state of our economy and our dependence on foreign oil, we have essentally wasted nearly twenty years on a promising technology that, had it been adequately supported early on, might by now have developed into an economical energy source. The narrow mindedness (and, perhaps, dishonesty) of some scientists has been revealed. And this whole saga seems to point at some problem with our basic understanding of physics. For cold fusion may not be fusion at all, but some other process. This should make us wonder about some of the other energy systems allegedly developed in recent years, and perhaps claims of gravity control as well. This could, if the elites allow it (don't hold your breath), lead to an entire host of new technologies and a massive rethinking of basic physics.

Is the Vatican easing humanity toward alien disclosure?

Church astronomer latest to speak of "space brothers"

by Thomas Horn

Vatican chief astronomer Father Jose Gabriel Funes in a long interview with the L'Osservatore Romano newspaper this week made news by saying there is a certain possibility of intelligent life elsewhere in the universe, and that such notion "doesn't contradict our faith."

"How can we rule out that life may have developed elsewhere? Just as we consider earthly creatures as 'a brother,' and 'sister,' why should we not talk about an 'extraterrestrial brother'? It would still be part of creation," he said.

The statements by Funes are the latest in a string of recent comments by Vatican astronomers confirming a belief that discovery may be made in the near future of alien life, including intelligent life, and that this discovery would not unhinge the doctrine of Christ.

In 2005, another Vatican astronomer, Guy Consolmagno tackled this subject in a 50-page booklet, Intelligent Life in the Universe, in which he concluded that chances are better than not that mankind is facing a future discovery of extraterrestrial intelligence.

> If ET life is something Vatican officials have privately considered for some time, why speak of it so openly now?

Approximately 7 years ago Monsignor Corrado Balducci made similar news when he said ETs were actually already interacting with earth and that some of the Vatican's leaders were aware of it.

Before his death in 1999, maverick Catholic theologian Father Malachi Martin hinted at such more than once. In 1997, while on Coast to Coast AM radio, Art Bell asked him why the Vatican was heavily invested in the study of deep space at Mt Graham Observatory in southeastern Arizona. As a retired professor of the Pontifical Biblical Institute, Father Martin was uniquely qualified to hold in secret, information pertaining to the Vatican's Advanced Technology Telescope (VATT) project at the Mount Graham International Observatory (MGIO). Martin's answer ignited a firestorm of interest among Christian and secular UFOlogists when he said, "Because the mentality... amongst those who [are] at the... highest levels of Vatican administration and geopolitics, know that, now, knowledge of what's going on in space, and what's approaching us, could be of great import in the next five years, ten years."

Those cryptic words "...what's approaching us, could be of great import in the next five years, ten years," was followed in subsequent interviews with discussion of a mysterious "sign in the sky" that Malachi believed was approaching from the North. People familiar with Malachi believe he may have been referring to a near-future arrival of alien intelligence.

If ET life is something Vatican officials have privately considered for some time, why speak of it so openly now, in what some perceive as a careful doctrinal unveiling over the last 24 months? Is this a deliberate effort by church officials to "warm-up" the laity to ET Disclosure? Are official church publications on the subject an attempt to soften the blow before disclosure arrives, in order to help the faithful retain their orthodoxy in light of unprecedented forthcoming knowledge?

There might be a more mundane explanation for the Vatican's recent interest in all things spacey.

Writing on Thursday, May 15th for Newsweek (The Vatican and Little Green Men), Sharon Begley noted that "[this] might be part of a push to demonstrate the Vatican's embrace of science (in 1992 it apologized for that whole unfortunate Galileo mess, after all)... Interestingly, the Vatican has plans to host a conference in Rome next spring to mark the 150th anniversary of the Origin of Species, Charles Darwin's seminal work on the theory of evolution. Conference organizers say it will look beyond entrenched ideological positions—including misconstrued creationism. The Vatican says it wants to reconsider the problem of evolution 'with a broader perspective' and says an 'appropriate consideration is needed more than ever before.'"

...every planet that harbours intelligent, self-aware life may also have had a Christ walk across its methane seas...

The 'appropriate consideration' Begley mentions may have been alluded to by Guy Consolmagno two years ago in an interview with the Sunday Herald. That article pointed out how Consolmagno's job included reconciling "the wildest reaches of science fiction with the flint-eyed dogma of the Holy See" and that his latest mental meander was about "the Jesus Seed" - "a brain-warping theory which speculates that, perhaps, every planet that harbours intelligent, self-aware life may also have had a Christ walk across its methane seas, just as Jesus... did here on Earth in Galilee. The salvation of the Betelguesians may have happened simultaneously with the salvation of the Earthlings," the article said. This sounds a bit like holy panspermia to me — the idea that life on earth was "seeded" by something such as an asteroid impact — but in this case "the seed" was divinely appointed and reconciled to Jesus / God.

Do other religions agree with the Vatican on ET brethren?

Following L'Osservatore Romano's interview with Jose Funes, Muslim and Jewish leaders joined to say their religion could accommodate an ET reality, while a scholar for the Russian Orthodoxy excluded the possibility of extraterrestrial intelligence.

The question of how the world's political and religious communities would respond if suddenly faced with visitors from beyond is something world religions and even the US Government has studied. Paul Davies of The Atlantic Monthly wrote in 2003 that the discovery of even a single bacterium somewhere beyond Earth could force mankind to revise its understanding of who we are and where we fit into the cosmic scheme of things. Davies speculated that such a find could throw the human race into a spiritual identity crisis that could leave some gasping for faith in God.

In contrast, the Alexander UFO Religious Crisis Survey of ministers indicated that a majority of people—both religious and non-religious—not only believe in but could accept an ET reality without throwing God out with the bathwater.

Davies hopes this is true. As a cosmologist he sees order in the universe, including the anthropic balances that make life possible elsewhere. This has led to a deep personal interest in the subject of God and ET in which his response to either an ET discovery or visitation would be compatible to his religious ideas. He says the discovery of extraterrestrial life might actually substantiate biblical creation, not challenge it, if mankind is—as the Alexander UFO Religious Crisis Survey suggests—ready for it.

Professor Anthony Tambasco of Georgetown University not only believes the world—including its religious people—is ready for ET, but responding to NASA's recent press releases about life potentially existing on Mars, he said that if the discovery of life is substantiated, "it will not unravel traditional biblical convictions, but rather provide an opportunity to enlarge or broaden them."

In a related CCN article, Sayyid Syeed of the Islamic Society of North America said, "Most Muslims would also welcome the discovery of life off of Earth." The Koran refers to Allah as the God of 'worlds,' he said, not just one world.

Rabbi James Ruden of the American Jewish Committee says most Jews also leave open the possibility of life on other planets in their interpretation of Genesis.

But What If ET Is Already Here, and He's the Devil?

Unidentified Flying Objects (UFOs) are historically connected to the idea of extraterrestrial life. In some cases, behavior of these strange sightings have left witnesses feeling as if they had observed something alive, not mechanical. "I have become thoroughly convinced that UFOs are real," popular Christian writer Hal Lindsey once wrote. "I believe these beings are not only extraterrestrial but supernatural in origin. To be blunt, I think they are demons."

In Angels Dark and Light, Gary Kinnaman accepts UFO sightings as the manifestations of angels of darkness. "My main reason for thinking this is that UFO sightings have never, at least to my knowledge, led a person closer to God. In fact, most UFO experiences have just the opposite effect."

Associate professor of psychology Elizabeth L. Hillstrom points out in her book Testing the Spirits that a growing number of scholars support similar conclusions of UFOnauts being synonymous with historical demons:

> From a Christian perspective, Vallee's explanation of UFOs is the most striking because of its parallels with demonic activity. UFO investigators have noticed these similarities. Vallee himself, drawing from extrabiblical literature on demonic activities, establishes a number of parallels between UFOnauts and demons....Pierre Guerin, a UFO researcher and a scientist associated with the French National Council for Scientific Research, is not so cautious: "The modern UFOnauts and the demons of past days are probably identical." Veteran researcher John Keel, who wrote UFOs: Operation Trojan Horse and other books on the subject, comes to the same conclusion: "The UFO manifestations seem to be, by and large, merely minor variations of the age-old demonological phenomenon."

Other theologians caution against connecting UFOs with demonology. They say if UFOs represent anything supernatural at all, the unidentified objects could be manifestations of good angels, while phenomenon such as so-called alien abduction is more in line with manifestations of demons. In other words, good "Watchers" observe earth from UFOs (using what one evangelical theologian recently referred to as "celestial conveyances") while fallen Watchers such as those spoken of in the apocryphal Book of Enoch do evil.

Whatever intelligence is behind much of this mysterious heavenly activity, one thing is for sure, a long history of UFO sightings in connection to momentous or major religious historical events exists, as illustrated in the images included in this article.

Regardless of the position one takes on UFOs specifically, the possibility of open contact with intelligent extraterrestrial life has never been better according to those who study deep space for the Vatican.

ANOMALIES ON THE MOON

by Tim Swartz

Our bodies are tuned to its passage, and our calendars to its phases. Next to the sun, no other object in the heavens has played such an important role for mankind as the moon.

It is our closest celestial neighbor and has been the inspiration of lovers and poets for countless generations. It has been the source of spiritual awakenings and the earliest of religious beliefs. Some have even credited the moon as being crucial for the development of life on Earth.

It has been extensively studied and photographed, yet, even after six manned moon missions, there is still more that we do not know about the moon than what we do know. There is even a debate among scientists on whether the moon is a true satellite, and even refers to the Earth-Moon system as a "double planet."

We do know that the moon is one-sixth the size of the Earth; it is about 4.5 billion years old; it is approximately 238,000 miles distant from the Earth; it has a thin atmosphere made up of a highly dispersed collection of molecules believed to originate from the release of gases from within the Moon by moonquakes and the loosening of molecules from the surface by the impact of molecules from the solar wind. It is widely thought that the moon has no water, though there have been hints of ice within craters near the poles. Unlike the Earth, the moon has no magnetic field. However, some rocks brought back from the Apollo missions have a preserved magnetism in them. One explanation for this is that the Moon had an ancient magnetic field that somehow disappeared after the old lunar rocks had formed.

The origins of the moon have been hotly debated among scientists for years. The theory of the day holds that in the early days of the solar system, our moon may have formed from matter ejected from the Earth after a collision with a wandering celestial body the size of Mars. Others say that the moon was formed independently from the same cloud of dust and gas as the Earth, and immediately became the Earth's natural satellite. Another theory holds that the moon originated somewhere else in space and was captured by the Earth.

Strange Things on the Moon

The one thing that all scientists do agree on is that the moon is, and always has been, devoid of life of any kind. It is an extremely hostile, sterile environment, with withering radiation from the sun, and extremes in temperature that range from broiling hot in the sun, to freezing cold at night.

Nevertheless, the moon is far from inactive. Unexplained lights and shapes seen on the Moon are a classic example of an enigma called Transient Lunar Phenomena (TLP), and skywatchers have been intrigued by them since the earliest times.

It is thought that the first recorded example of TLP was on June 18, 1178. This is when a group of men at Canterbury in England witnessed an incredible event according to a manuscript written by Gervase, a 12th century monk whose chronicle is preserved in the library of Trinity College, Cambridge. Gervase reports that the men were startled by "a flaming torch" which suddenly appeared on the four-day-old crescent Moon, "spewing out, over a considerable distance, fire, hot coals and sparks." The Moon is said to have "writhed like a wounded snake" and assumed a blackish appearance shortly after this unprecedented occurrence.

On May 4, 1783, William Herschel, the astronomer who discovered the planet Uranus, observed through his telescope a strange glow on the dark half of the crescent moon that resembled: "Slowly burning charcoal thinly covered with ashes."

In April 1787 Herschel recorded other prominent TLP, and he became convinced that the lunar surface was experiencing volcanic activity. Herschel even invited King George III to view the moon with him using the royal telescope in the grounds of Windsor.

In July 1821, Franz Gruithuisen, the creator of the meteoric impact theory of Lunar cratering, saw flashing points of light on the surface of the moon, however, when he revealed he had discovered a lunar city he was ridiculed by his colleagues and he burned his notes.

Since those early observations, many lunar observers have reported witnessing the brief appearance of inexplicable mists, cloud-like shapes, glows and flashes on the moon. Astronomer F.H. Thornton reported seeing "a puff of whitish vapor obscuring details for some miles," in February 1949. In 1954, Astronomer Walter H.Haas observed a "milky luminosity" present on the wall of the crater Tycho.

That same year, Spanish engineer Sixto Campo seriously promoted the theory that a technologically advanced civilization had once waged nuclear war against itself on the lunar surface. Annihilation came quickly he claimed, and the resulting craters remain as testament to the holocaust on a now dead world. However, red glows continue to be observed in the region of the moon's North Pole and blue misty glows have been periodically noted near craters at the South Pole.

Russian astronomer N.A. Kozyrev, has recorded numerous incidents of red transient lunar phenomena, particularly in the 80-mile wide crater known as Alphonsus. It was at this location in 1965 that the final Ranger probe 9 crash-landed. Aristarchus is not only one of the brightest formations on the moon; it is responsible for more than half the number of reported TLP.

Astronomers take TLP very seriously and one of the first real attempts to catalog a large number of TLP sightings was made on behalf of NASA and published in NASA Technical Report R-277. This report gave details of 579 mysterious lunar events dating from November 1540 to October 1967. The February 1969 issue of National Geographic says that: "One could disregard such reports were it not that they number more than 800, many of them from respected astronomers. The sightings have been concentrated in a few locations, notably the craters Aristarchus and Alphonsus."

TLP also was observed close-up by the Apollo astronauts. On July 19, 1969, the Apollo 11 command module had just achieved orbit around the moon when Mission Control received word that amateur astronomers reported TLP in the vicinity of the crater Aristarchus. Asked to check out the situation, astronaut Neil Armstrong looked out his window toward the earthlit region and observed an "area that is considerably more illuminated than the surrounding area. It just has…seems to have…a slight amount of fluorescence to it." Although he wasn't sure, Armstrong believed the region was Aristarchus.

As well, while in lunar orbit, Harrison Schmitt on Apollo 17 witnessed a flash of light near the crater Grimaldi. In the past, more than a dozen reports of light flashes have been reported by Earth-based observers near Grimaldi.

It would appear that despite what has been believed for years, the moon is far from a cold, inert neighbor after all. Yet, despite a profusion of observations and space missions, the moon still manages to retain its secrets, and to remain intriguing to this day.

Anomalies on the Moon

Along with strange lights and clouds, the moon also has its share of what appears to be mysterious structures and shapes on its surface. In 1953, astronomer John O'Neil observed a 12-mile-long "bridge" across the crater Mare Crisium. British astronomer Dr. H.P. Wilkens verified its presence, "It looks artificial. It's almost incredible that such a thing could have been formed in the first instance, or if it was formed, could have lasted during the ages in which the moon has been in existence."

Early Russian and American lunar probes, such as the 1966 U.S. Lunar Orbiter 2, took photos showing strange spires on the moon. One scientist from NASA said that they looked like an "array of antennae." Other pictures show a remarkable series of domes that appear to be about 1,500 feet high and two to ten miles wide.

On March 21, 1996, a grass-roots space research group under the aegis of Richard Hoagland's The Mars Mission, held a press briefing at the National Press Club in Washington DC. The group had called the conference to report on analyses of 30-year-old "suppressed Evidence" revealing alleged manufactured artifacts on the moon.

The suppressed evidence consisted of a series of photographs showing unusual structures taken by various lunar probes and Apollo missions. One anomaly, referred to as "the Shard," is an obvious structure which rises above the Moon's surface by more than a mile. The amount of sunlight reflecting from parts of the Shard indicates a composition of crystal or glass rather than lunar rock.

Another anomaly is called "the Castle," and was photographed in 1969 hanging seven miles above the lunar surface by Apollo 10. The Castle seems to have a definite structure, like the remnant wall of some ancient building. The bottom looks as if it has rows of columns that support a high spire. Whatever it is, it's much brighter than the surrounding landscape.

Hoagland insists that there are other intriguing photographs of strange moon anomalies that are currently hidden deep inside the NASA safes. Hoagland speculates that this information is being kept secret because NASA feels the public is not yet psychologically ready for the implications that the moon may have been visited by intelligent life whose origins are somewhere other than planet Earth.

CHAPTER 2

Here's a peak at Chapter 2 of UFO Crash at San Augustin

George Adamski And The Rock Island 508

I did not know George Adamski personally, but had met him briefly at his home on the slopes of Mt. Palomar, California, on a hot June day in 1958. A friend and I had driven up the winding two-lane highway to meet him. We had stopped down the hill at a restaurant where he had once worked and were unable to obtain his unlisted phone number. There were several people in the restaurant who knew his place, one of those "just-up-the-road-can't-miss it" directions. But with instructions from several people, we still passed it several times before we spied it. It was an unpretentious little aqua house with a gravel driveway winding its way around the eastern side of the property. The road stopped abruptly at an addition that was under construction. Some temporary steps approached a screen door, flanked by an open stud framework with a roof and roughed-in floor. A small hand-lettered sign, almost an afterthought, reminded us to knock.

Since there was no car in sight, we thought perhaps no one was at home. Here we were, banging on a screen door and trying not to stare through the open stud walls. Finally, a door opened to the left, and a puzzled, but resigned, lady walked to the door and spoke to us through the screen. She was pleasant enough when we asked if this was the Adamski residence. She confirmed it was, but informed us that "the professor is resting."

We had brought with us a Polaroid (B&W) photo of "a flying saucer" another contactee, named Buck Nelson, had taken in southern Missouri sometime in 1956 or 1957. She asked if she could show it to the professor. She disappeared briefly again, and a few minutes later a large-nosed man pulled aside the door curtain, peered out and soon emerged. He was a quiet man who spoke with a slight Eastern European accent. I remember little else. He showed mild interest in the photo and talked politely for a while. By this time we had been asked to step into the addition area out of the sun. My friend and I expected an invitation into the cooler part of house, but this was not forthcoming. He had something to do, and we, of course, had to get on our way. The lady turned out to be Lucy McGinnis, his housekeeper and secretary. That was the first and only time I ever saw George Adamski.

Fig. 8. George Adamski*, an early contactee who claimed he had taken a ride in a flying saucer. His family migrated to the US around 1900 from Poland. He served two hitches in the US Cavalry between 1913 and 1919. Author was asked by NICAP to investigate a claim Adamski made in 1959. Photo Jan Sterk,* Time Magazine, June 1, 1959.

Adamski was born in Poland in 1891 of a Polish father and Egyptian mother. His parents migrated to the United States around 1900. In 1913, a twenty-two-year-old Adamski joined the United States Army. He served two enlistments, the last one being from 1917 to 1919 during the United States' involvement in World War I. He was assigned to the 13th Cavalry and was honorably discharged in 1919.

I had been able to meet some of the key contactees in the 1950s who claimed to have had contact with extraterrestrials. What struck me at the time was just how ordinary these contactees appeared. I had met George Van Tassel, Truman Bethrum, Daniel Fry and a lonely farmer from the Ozarks named Buck Nelson. But Adamski was an enigma. He had little to do with the other contactees and attended few, if any, of the UFO meetings of the late '50s. However, he did appear earlier, with other contactees at a conference at a Hollywood hotel, and a time or two at the Giant Rock Flying Saucer Convention. We were not sure his experiences were true, but I found the photos in his book were very interesting. I remember reading his first book Flying Saucers Have Landed, co-authored with Desmond Leslie, which sold over a quarter million copies and launched him on a world-wide lecture tour in 1954. I recall his writing about the blond Nordic space beings with long flowing hair. He talked of wonderful woven tapestries in their ships and movies in 3-D (the 3-D craze hit Hollywood about 1953). I am embarrassed to admit that I scoffed at the idea of a radio the size of a pack of cigarettes that fit into a shirt pocket. Nowadays, with the advent of miniaturization, a radio and one or two calculators can fit into a shirt pocket, and even wristwatch radios are available, i.e., the Dick Tracy comics in the 1940s and 1950s.

I did not follow George Adamski's fortunes with any degree of scrutiny until the Kansas City UFO Study Club scheduled him to speak on November 30, 1958. I had been a member of the club for awhile, but I had broken away and begun a NICAP affiliate in the Kansas City area earlier. Adamski duly arrived in Kansas City with his secretary, Lucy McGinnis, and gave the lecture which was well attended. I did not attend, but heard later that Adamski gave his presentation garbed in a white sheet-like robe affair. One or two others on the stage were also asked to wear one, including the club president.

Adamski and Lucy McGinnis were put on the train (the Rock Island 508) on the morning of December 1, 1958. He was to proceed to Davenport, Iowa, for another engagement or two, and then was due back in Kansas City the following Saturday, December 8th. When he returned to Kansas City, he related the story of his contact claim. The transcript given here was from a taped report given to the UFO Study Club at a subsequent meeting. The UFO Club president and his wife also signed a statement concerning their witness of Adamski's claim, which they believed to be true.

TRANSCRIPT OF ADAMSKI CLAIM

This is a transcript of a tape recording made at the Kansas City Museum by Mr. Paul Wheeler, president of the Kansas City UFO Study Club on Sunday, December 6, 1958. The report contains a contact claim as related to Mr. Wheeler by George Adamski who lectured to the club on November 30, 1958. The following day, December 1, is the day Adamski is supposed to have made this contact. The report was presented to about twenty-five members of the club a week after the occurrence and is related here by Mr. Wheeler. Any material appearing in parentheses has been added to help clarify the story.

"While Mr. Adamski was with us, we met him at the train, and we were with them (Adamski and Lucy McGinnis, his secretary) as much as possible while they were here. After the lecture, Mr. Adamski was scheduled to go to Davenport, Iowa. He left here on Monday (December 1) morning, and the train was about an hour late coming into Kansas City, and consequently late in leaving. He left here the Monday following the lecture (November 30), and he was due back the following Saturday night (December 8). We received a telegram that he was coming back by air and he would arrive at the airport at about 11:45 (a.m.). So, Mrs. McGinnis called us and told us what time the plane would be in, so we went over and picked her up and proceeded to go over to the airport and pick him up. And we were there when the plane came in.

"We went to dinner at the airport, and after we sat down to the table, Mr. Adamski and Mrs. McGinnis sat down at one side of the table and my wife and I sat down on the other side. So he (Mr. A.) pulled out of his pocket an envelope and handed it to Mrs. McGinnis and said, 'You'd better send these tickets in and get your money back.' We said, 'What happened?' and he said, 'Well, I was taken up there in a flying saucer.'"

"Now, when they arrived in Kansas City from California the night before Thanksgiving, Mrs. McGinnis informed us after a short visit that she would have to go to the ticket office at the Union Station and obtain tickets for him to go up to Davenport and conduct a lecture up there. So we went with her to the ticket office and stood by her when she obtained this ticket and its return. It was placed in an envelope, the same envelope I've mentioned, and given to her, and she paid for it. I think the price was about $17.00. Then, after the lecture, she said they found out they would have to have reservations, so we drove down to the station with her, and we stood by her when these tickets were produced, and reservations were made on the train for the following morning. In the morning, my wife, Luella, went around and picked up Mrs. McGinnis according to previous arrangement and then went down to the Muehlebach Hotel and picked up George Adamski and then took them up to the depot where they visited. The train was an hour late, better than a half-hour, and it was late in getting out, so they waited there and finally he left and went down and got on the train.

"The porter had taken his grips down and placed them on the train and placed them in (Mr. A's) reservation. But when he (Mr. A) got down, he told us later that the grips had never gotten further than the vestibule of the coach. They sat there evidently waiting for someone to take care of them.

"But about twenty minutes out of Kansas City the train stopped. We didn't learn why the train stopped. There might have been a block signal, or there may have been any cause the train would have stopped. Then, he said that the vestibule was open and he got out and stretched himself and kind of stepped around a few moments. An automobile drove up, and then the driver got out and stated that he (Mr. Adamski) come with him, and the driver went up into the vestibule and got Mr. Adamski's luggage and put it in the auto. Mr. Adamski got in the car with him, and they drove around to a wooded area and parked their car in sort of a hide-away place, and a flying saucer did come down within about fifty feet of the ground. Mr. Adamski said that this was his first experience of teleportation. He saw his grips being teleported up into that thing, then he walked into the area, and he was teleported up and so was the man who was with him. This happened about eleven o'clock (a.m.) as near as we can figure it, and he was up with those people all that day until after dark, and of course they took him to Davenport. He was with them approximately eight hours, I should judge. That's what we estimated later when we talked about it. And after dark he was let down in a wooded area very secluded and was teleported back to the ground with this same man.

"He said that there were two men on this craft he had met before, and he said that there were six others that he had not met, and they were teleported back down to the ground and there another car was waiting. It took him back to the hotel where the reservations were made. In the meantime, the people there had met the train, and no Adamski on the train! You can imagine about how they felt, and somewhat worried and perturbed because he hadn't shown up. They wondered what was going to happen to their schedule, but as soon as he got to the hotel he called up Mr. Roberts, the man who was in charge of that group, and told him what happened. Of course, you can imagine the feeling that they would have and also the elation that might come with it. "Now while they were up in this craft, Mr. Adamski learned many things, things which I could not give here because time would not permit and because too, there were things that were not to be revealed as yet. Time will bring them forth, and he was told that, on another contact, a more detailed explanation of these things would be given, and we would have them. I thought this was rather outstanding. I have written an affidavit to the fact that I stood by them when they purchased the tickets, was by Mrs. McGinnis when she made the reservations, and that I believe the story. This affidavit is going to be copied and we will mail them a copy or perhaps three or four copies and we will keep one for our own records. Well, we thought this was something you people would be interested in and naturally, being a UFO Club, you would be interested in it and should have that information."

Sometime in the second week of December 1958, I called Major Keyhoe in Washington. I explained Adamski's claim and asked him if he wanted us to look into it. "By all means," he said, "and get written signed statements if you can." I visited the Rock Island special agent and got his blessing and assistance. After Christmas we drove on a very blustery December 30th to interview the conductor and fireman who were then at their homes in Trenton, Missouri, about 90 miles northeast of Kansas City. We had to wait until January 10, 1959, until the two chair car attendants were available, and statements were obtained from them also.

CONTACT INVESTIGATION

Tuesday, December 17, 1958

I began the investigation by visiting the Rock Island Special Agent's office at 14th and Wyoming, Kansas City, Kansas. There I talked with Special Agent Walker and told him the portion of Adamski's story which involved the train. Mr. Walker checked his records and found the train Mr. Adamski claimed to have ridden was the R.I. #508 which left Kansas City on December 1st for Des Moines. Special Agent Walker telephoned the R.I. operator's office at Trenton, Mo., and asked the special agent there to check his records of the 508 after it left Kansas City. Information was as follows:

(1) #508 was due to leave Kansas City at 9:30 a.m.

(2) The train did not depart until 10:21 (51 minutes late).

(3) There were no unscheduled stops or delays listed on the schedule, between Kansas City and Minneapolis, Minn. – – the train's destination.

(4) The train's first stop after it left the Kansas City Union Station was Excelsior Springs, Mo. It arrived at this location at 10:59. (Normal running time between these two points is 39 minutes).

(5) The train arrived in Trenton at 11:55. The normal running time between Kansas City and Trenton is one hour and forty-seven minutes. The train is ordinarily scheduled to leave Kansas City at 9:30 a.m. and arrive in Trenton at 11:17 a.m. On the date of Dec. 1st, it left Kansas City at 10:21 a.m. and arrived at Trenton at 11:55, thus reducing the normal running time by thirteen minutes.

(Note: all crewman who were interviewed agreed that the train could not have made up this time had there been any unrecorded delays of any length).

(6). The train crew consisted of:

1 - Engineer Glen Kidd, 1106 Laclade, Trenton, Mo.

2 - Fireman L.E. Duke, 1313 Lulu, Trenton, Mo.

3 - Conductor Ross McClintic, 702 E. 6th, Trenton, Mo.

4 - Head Brakeman Owen T. Wright, Trenton, Mo.

5 - Rear Brakeman (or flagman) Truman D. Lieper, Trenton, Mo.

6 - Three additional men.

December 22, 1958

I visited the R.I. Passenger Traffic Office at 1021 Grand, Kansas City, Missouri, in order to obtain the names of the chair car attendants. Mr. McCrary of this department said that these records were not available at this office, but that he would telephone Minneapolis to obtain them for me, and asked me to call back later that afternoon. This I did, and I learned that the following three men were listed as chair car attendants on the 508 on December 1st.

1 - Roy James, 2414 Montgall, Kansas City, Mo.

2 - Albert Reed, 4035 Monroe, Kansas City, Mo.

3 - Fred Lawson (extra man) of Minneapolis, Minn.

James and Reed were due in Kansas City that night on the R.I. Rocket from Minnesota, so I went to the station and interviewed them as they got off the train. Chair car attendant Reed said that he recalled the trip in question, and he stated the following:

(1) that the train did make up some time between Kansas City and Trenton,

(2) that there were no delays other than the late start,

(3) that the train could not have made up time and yet be delayed,

(4) that he closed the vestibules for which he was responsible, as soon as the train began to move from the station, and that they were not opened again until the train reached the first stop at Excelsior Springs,

(5) that he was not instructed to give nor did he know of any delay announcements.

Mr. Reed was also shown a photograph of Adamski, but he did not recognize it.

Chair car attendant James recalled nothing significant about the trip except that the train was late. He said that:

(1) the train could not have had any delays and have made up thirteen minutes on the schedule,

(2) the vestibules were closed until the next scheduled stop,

(3) once in a great while a well-wisher of a passenger will get caught on a moving train, but when this happens, the train is halted and the vestibule opened, and the individual carefully escorted to the ground. This, he said, is a rare occasion,
(4) he neither heard nor made any announcement of the train being delayed.

Mr. James was also shown a picture of Adamski, but said that he did not remember the man. (Note: Both attendants said that the train did pause at a place known as Airline Junction (about fifteen minutes from the station). This pause, however, was only a few seconds duration, as its purpose was to make sure no other trains were in the crossing. Both men stated that the vestibules are never opened at this location for any reason.

December 23, 1958

I made a trip to Airline Junction, more formally known as the Missouri Pacific and Kansas City Southern Crossing. It is approximately one mile inside the yard limits. I talked with operator J. W. Jones who said he was on duty the morning of December 1st at the West Wye Tower which was his station of duty. He checked the Tower's records and found that the R.I. #508 had paused at the track junction for no more than two seconds before proceeding north. He also said that it was an Interstate Commerce Commission regulation that all trains pause at this junction before crossing it. Mr. Jones telephoned Tower 8 of the K.C. Terminal R.R. which is one and a quarter miles south of his tower. Their records showed that #508 had passed there three minutes earlier, at 10:32 a.m., which would establish an average speed of twenty-five miles per hour between these two points.

(Note: For Mr. Adamski to have gotten off the train under these circumstances would entail much foresight and knowledge on his part. He would have had to have known that the train would pause at this junction fifteen minutes after leaving the Union Station. He would have had to be prepared to grab his luggage, open the vestibule and jump off and close the vestibule behind him before getting to the R.R. grade - all in two seconds! The recorded circumstances do not jibe with Mr. Adamski's casual story about stepping off the train).

Dec. 30, 1958
I made a trip to Trenton, Mo. with Mr. Lloyd Hendrix, to interview the engineer, conductor, and fireman. The first stop was at the home of Mr. Glen McClintic, the conductor of #508 on December 1st. He checked his records of the train and found that they concurred with the information that had been obtained about the train earlier. They were:

(1) that there were no unscheduled stops between Kansas City and Minneapolis,

(2) that a delay of any duration would have prevented the train making up any time,

(3) that if there were any announcements as to the train's schedule being changed, he would be the man to make such announcement. This he did not.

(4) that it is virtually impossible for anyone to open a vestibule and close it from the ground. This would be necessary for someone who got off a train and at an unscheduled stop.

(5) that there were no vestibules opened or found open on this run.

Separate signed statements of chair car attendants James and Reed are included in this report, as well as a signed statement by Conductor McClintic.

Mr. Hendrix and I were unable to spend any time with Engineer Kidd, but we did talk with the fireman, L. E. Duke, who confirmed that there were no delays and that the facts given by the other crewmen were correct according to his records.

INVESTIGATOR'S CONCLUSIONS

(1) The train positively had no unscheduled stops between Kansas City and Davenport.

(2) As stated by all interviewed, it would have been impossible for the train to have made up any time in its schedule with any delays.

(3) The only place Adamski could have gotten off the train between Kansas City and Excelsior Springs was at the Airline Junction. To have done this, according to the circumstances, he would have had to have planned to get off here. This would not coincide with his story.

(4) The Weather Bureau reported a temperature of 37 degrees between 10 and 11 a.m. on December 1st, only 5 degrees above freezing. Adamski would have had to have strong reasons for getting off the train in that weather, even if he had had the chance.

(5) It is possible that Mr. Adamski was on the train, but if he was, he did not get off until he had reached his destination. To do this, he would have needed two tickets from the outset, as he still had one unpunched ticket in his possession when he arrived back in Kansas City.

(6) There were no rented cars engaged to drive in a northerly direction or any other direction on that date, due to transportation difficulties caused by strikes. There were only local rentals on that day. Mr. Adamski must have had pre-arranged or private transportation available or else he took some other public transportation. In any case, he arrived in Davenport, Iowa some eight hours later (which is about the time it would take to drive from Kansas City to Davenport by car or bus.)

(7) Adamski has fabricated all or at least most of his claim.

Need A Speaker ?

Well known UFO researcher and speaker Art Campbell is booking engagements. Have you heard about the new Eisenhower Research ? Art has learned and documented an incredible story of a secret cold war trip by president Eisenhower to Holloman AFB in 1955 to meet aliens. He has found witnesses. He will speak and show excellent visuals on this or the below Plains of San Augustin Crash story. Contact him at Artc@connpoint.net and visit his excellent website www.ufocrashbook.com

Art is also the author of another great piece of research, *UFO crash At San Augustin.*The UFO Store Magazine is pleased to bring you the reader a series of articles from this new highly acclaimed book in the coming year.

.What they say:
Stanton Friedman, nuclear physicist, says: "Art Campbell has done an incredible job of researching the recovery of a 1947 crashed flying saucer on The Plains of San Augustin in the Roswell time line. He has an exciting story to tell. I highly recommend him and his book."

Timothy Good, noted English UFO author, says: "Campbell's book is extremely well researched with important new information."

The first of these articles below has new information that has important Roswell implications. Art found letters at Harvard University verifying the below material and has permission to publish this new and important data on a group of Harvard archaeologists who were near The UFO Plains crash in the 1st week of July 1947.

FACTS ABOUT FLYING SAUCERS (UNIDENTIFIED FLYING OBJECTS)

- Published by the National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena -

Vol. 1, No. 8 June, 1959

ADAMSKI'S LATEST CLAIM BLASTED BY NICAP AFFILIATE

A claim by George Adamski that spacemen flew him from Kansas City to Davenport, in December of '58, is completely contrary to factual evidence, according to information obtained by Director Arthur C. Campbell of the Kansas City NICAP Affiliate. Affidavits secured by Director Campbell, now at NICAP headquarters, appear to disprove Adamski's latest claim completely.

When Adamski visited London recently, copies of conference. He attempted to seize these affidavits were read to him at a press the documents and when this was prevented he angrily charged that he was being framed by the CIA (Central IntelligenceAgency).

Before the details are presented, the importance of the Adamski case should be emphasized for the benefit of new members who may be unaware of this long-standing controversy. Mr. Adamski is without a doubt the No. 1 "contactee," that is, the best-known of all those who swear they have met spacemen from other worlds.

Since 1952, he has repeatedly claimed contacts with spacemen. He has claimed to have ridden in their spaceships, on trips around Venus and the moon. He has published photographs alleged to be pictures of UFO scouts and motherships.

These reports and pictures have been publicly called fakes by several critics, including Frank Edwards, a member of the NICAP Board. But Adamski's believers insist he is an honest, persecuted man.

False or true, the sensational nature of his claims have kept many people from seriously considering the verified UFO evidence—factual sighting reports by hundreds of pilots, control-tower operators, radarmen, guided missile trackers and other technically trained personnel. For this reason, it is vitally important that Adamski's stories either be proved beyond question—or, if false, that they be completely discredited.

The Kansas City incident may be the long-sought answer:

On the morning of Dec. 1, 1958, Mr. Adamski was preparing to leave Kansas City for a talk in Davenport, Iowa. Chair car reservations on the Rock Island R.R. had previously been made for him by his secretary, Mrs. Lucy McGinnis. This arrangement was witnessed by Mr. and Mrs. Paul M. Wheeler of Independence, Missouri, who provided transportation for Adamski and Mrs. McGinnis during the Kansas City visit.

When the railroad and chair-car tickets were bought, on Dec. 1, the Wheelers also witnessed this purchase. The train to Davenport, scheduled to leave at 9:30 a.m., was nearly an hour late, but the Wheelers and Mrs. McGinnis remained until the train was called. At this time, a porter took Adamski's luggage and went aboard the train, with Adamski following.

The Wheelers naturally assumed Adamski had proceeded to Davenport by train, as planned. But the following Saturday, when he returned to Kansas City by plane, they were given a surprise.

In the presence of the Wheelers, Adamski handed Mrs. McGinnis what appeared to be his uncanceled round-trip Kansas City-Davenport tickets. He told her to get a refund. When the Wheelers asked what had happened, he gave them this explanation.

About 20 miles out of Kansas City, the train had stopped. It was announced, Adamski said, that there would be a 10-minute wait, and he decided to get out and stretch his legs. (The vestibule door, he explained, was already open.)

While outside, Adamski related he saw a car drive up. The driver took his luggage from the vestibule and asked him to come along. He was driven to a space craft concealed in a wooded area, and after boarding it he was flown to Davenport. There a waiting car took him to his hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler later signed a statement testifying to this account by Adamski and expressing their belief that it was true. They also confirmed the date of the ticket purchase and stated that the date on the uncanceled tickets was the same.

On learning of this new claim by Adamski, Director Campbell of the Kansas City NICAP Affiliate began a thorough investigation. First, he obtained all the details, in a tape recording made by Mr. Wheeler, also a signed statement by Mr. Wheeler and his wife.

Then, contacting the Rock Island Railroad, Campbell obtained the complete records of the train (R.I. #508) and the names of the train crew. In subsequent interviews he secured the following documented information:

1. There were no delays, no unscheduled stops between Kansas City and Davenport.

2. By I.C.C. (Interstate Commerce Commission) regulations, the train had paused for a two-second stop at "Airline junction", the point where its tracks crossed the Missouri-Pacific rails. No vestibules were opened during this brief halt in the Kansas City limits.

3. The first scheduled stop was Excelsior Springs, Mo., 38 minutes after departure from Kansas City.

4. Proving that any delay was impossible, the railroad showed that the train had made up 13 minutes between Kansas City and Trenton, the second stop.

Director Campbell's report to NICAP includes signed statements by trainmen of #508 including the conductor and two chair-car attendants.

Conductor Ross McClintic:

"There most certainly was no announcement of any 10-minute delay of the train at any time after leaving Kansas City. If there had been, I would have been the one to make the announcement. It is all but impossible for any person to close a vestibule from the outside; therefore any person making an unauthorized exit from the train during its momentary stop at "airline" or Missouri-Pacific junction would leave an open vestibule as evidence. There was no open vestibule found on this run."

Chair-car attendant Roy James:

"The vestibules were not open except at scheduled stops, and then they were closed immediately. There are rarely any unscheduled stops, and there were none on that date or I would have remembered it."

Chair-car attendant Albert Reed's statement confirmed those of James and the conductor.

After sending NICAP headquarters all the evidence, Mr. Campbell forwarded copies of the affidavits to a NICAP member in London—Mr. David Wightman, of Uranus Magazine. At this time Adamski was on a speaking tour. After he arrived in England he was interviewed at his hotel by Mr. Wightman and a reporter for a local paper.

Under questioning Adamski repeated his claim that spacemen had flown him from Kansas City to Davenport, whereupon Mr. Wightman produced the evidence from Mr. Campbell. At this point, Mr. Adamski attempted to take the documents, saying he would return them the next day. When a press photographer tried to catch the scene, Adamski left the room.

In a second press interview, the following day, Adamski asserted that the CIA probably had provided Mr. Campbell's evidence, in order to discredit his claims. He also accused Wightman of being a CIA agent.

A signed report on these incidents, which occurred on May 1 and 2, 1959, was sent to NICAP by Mr. Wightman. In this report, he said that Adamski had told a different version of his story to reporters at London Airport, before the hotel interview. Then Wightman concluded:

"This investigation should satisfy all true researchers as to Adamski's true colours and free them to continue with more constructive work."

During one London press conference, Adamski said that people "high in British society" were trying to arrange an audience with Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip. In an unusual comment, Buckingham Palace announced:

"The royal family has decided it cannot entertain Mr. Adamski or his ideas in any way."

Probably Queen Elizabeth's refusal was due in part to the press protests in Holland, after Adamski was received by Queen Juliana. The Catholic newspaper "De Volkskrant" called him a "quack" and other papers also expressed indignation at their queen's action.

Because of the Kansas City incident, a brief review of Adamski's other claims seems pertinent.

In 1952, he claimed his first contact with a spaceman. In published accounts, he said he had witnessed the desert landing of a flying-saucer scout ship. The spaceman, Adamski stated, communicated with him mainly by telepathy, but he also left hieroglyphics in the sand, made by symbols on the bottom of his shoes. Immediately after this "contact," Adamski reported, one of his party (some distance away) came to the spot and preserved the strange symbols with plaster of paris, which he happened to have with him.

This first alleged meeting was followed, Adamski said, by other contacts during which he made photographs of flying saucers and mother-ships. After these photographs were published, they were publically denounced as fakes by Frank Edwards, (now a NICAP Board member), Mr. Lonzo Dove, and other well known UFO investigators.

In a later publication, Mr. Adamski reported he had been invited aboard a space ship and had flown around Venus and the moon. Pictures accompanying this new claim also were publicly denounced by Mr. Edwards, Mr. Dove and others.

In the spring of '57, NICAP asked Adamski and other contactees if they would submit proof of their claims, including negatives of photographs, and also if they would take lie-detector tests. In reply, Adamski stated that personnel of two government agencies (not named) advised him not to release his negatives. He also refused to submit for examination a small amount of metal which he alleged was linked with a spaceship. He said he did not have a complete set of the symbolic footprints, which NICAP had hoped to examine. A lie-detector test, Adamski stated, would be useless, but if provided it should also be required of the NICAP panel and Board members, certain military and government officials, including the President of the United States—with all these persons subject to questioning by himself and other contactees.

Kansas City Claim Reviewed

If Mr. Adamski's claim is true, it leaves many questions unanswered.

How did the spaceman know about his Davenport trip, which train he would take, that there would an unscheduled stop, and that he would get out to stretch his legs? Was all this telepathy?

Did the spacemen have the cooperation of certain U.S. citizens who permitted the use of their cars-or were these cars owned and driven by spacemen masquerading as earthlings?

Why wasn't the "saucer" or spaceship seen arising from the woods near Kansas City and descending to land near Davenport? It was daylight at both times, and both areas are well-traveled and well- populated.

More important, how did the train make up the lost 10 minutes plus the 13 it gained between Kansas City and Trenton? To make up the 13 minutes recorded by the Rock Island Railroad, the engineer operated the train at the maximum speed prescribed by the I.C.C. To have made up an additional 10 minutes would have been almost impossible. It would have required a reckless high-speed run, with violent braking at certain points to avoid derailing. Even if the engineer had avoided a wreck, such a hazardous trip would have brought furious complaints from the passengers and an inevitable crackdown by the I.C.C. The result would have been at least a suspension and a stiff fine for the engineer.

Aside from these points, Mr. Campbell's statements from the railroad officials and trainmen, including the engineer, fireman and brakeman, completely deny any such possibility.

If the story is a fabrication, there are only two important questions to answer. First, what about the uncanceled train ticket?

This poses no problem. Another set could have been purchased by Adamski, or by some one aiding him.

Second, why would he have risked being seen getting off the train at Davenport, by some one expecting to meet him?

To avoid this, he could have gone through the day-coaches and gotten out well away from his parlor car, merging with the crowd. Or he could have left the train at the regular stop nearest Davenport, proceeding by bus, taxi or rented car.

If the Kansas City claim by Adamski is proved a fabrication, his other claims probably will be labeled false by many who once accepted these stories. However, if Mr. Adamski can get around all the facts presented here, and prove his story, we will make this public in NICAP publications.

The issue seems clear-cut. Either the Rock Island trainmen all lied—or Adamski deliberately attempted a hoax.

The U.N. Plan for UFO Disclosure and the International Year of Astronomy

The United Nations has designated the year 2009 as the International Year of Astronomy. Whether this was purposeful or just a coincidence, it lines up perfectly with their alleged plan to encourage disclosure of information about the UFO phenomenon next year. After one or more meetings and briefings on the subject were allegedly held in February of this year, I made a number of inquiries and have been astonished at the results.

I recently received two interesting responses to emails that I sent to various departments within the United Nations. The first came from the Office of the Spokesperson for the Secretary-General and was unsigned. It stated that the U.N. has named 2009 as the International Year of Astronomy. Among other things, this designation honors the four hundred year anniversary of Galileo Galilei as the father of modern observational astronomy.

Although no mention was made of my inquiry about the alleged UFO briefings or planned 2009 disclosure effort, it's noteworthy that the first email also mentioned the stated purposes of the International Year of Astronomy as found on the official website at www.astronomy2009.org. The first purpose has some interesting wording:

"Increase the scientific awareness among the general public through the communication of scientific results in astronomy and related fields, as well as the process of research and critical thinking that leads to these results."

By adding 'related fields' to the mission statement, the International Year of Astronomy event organizers can easily incorporate almost anything related to space, science and astronomy into their program. Although any mention of the search for life in the universe is conspicuously absent from the IYA-2009 website, that doesn't mean that the UN cannot use IYA-2009 as a springboard to launch various inquiries into the existence of extraterrestrial life or make announcements about UFO disclosure.

The second email response I received was from the UN Commission on Science and Technology for Development. It was also unsigned, brought several interesting facts about the commission to my attention and included and enigmatic statement. The commission on science and technology has several stated purposes. One includes "Formulating UN system recommendations and guidelines on science and technology."

If most everything involving science and technology within the U.N. organization somehow falls under the auspices of this commission, UFOs would certainly qualify. That makes this committee a possible key player in any plan for UFO disclosure. It also means we can likely read much into this statement that they included in the email:

"The United Nations is a forum for new ideas. The U.N. Commission on Science and Technology for Development encourages the sharing of scientific and technological discoveries to benefit all the nations of the world."

Again, without mentioning UFOs or Aliens, the second email response I received makes it clear that these subjects obviously qualify as scientific discoveries that should be shared. Based on the content of both emails, I believe that the United Nations is involved in a plan to disclose information about UFOs and Aliens.

While the United Nations is not in a position to pressure powerful nations that are responsible for most of the secrecy surrounding UFOs to disclose anything, they are always a convenient place for those nations to use as a platform to discuss, debate and share information.

It's entirely possible that the USA and other powerful nations have begun to run out of excuses when it comes to explaining away UFO sightings and encounters. With the number of credible witnesses and whistleblowers that have come forward on the rise and instantaneous reporting of large scale UFO events on the internet, nations in the know are beginning to face a real problem of credibility.

While most people understand a need for a certain level of government secrecy regarding the protection of citizens and property, there is always a danger that concealing too much information or lying about security issues can lead to a total loss of credibility. If people lose confidence in their government, it will not be long before that system of government is replaced by another.

The United Nations is the logical place for disclosure. It takes the pressure off nations that don't want to explain their individual roles in decades of secrecy or have the media spotlight directed solely at them. The 2009 UFO disclosure event is a likely scenario. We can only hope that the nations with all the secrets will finally agree to share some of them.

This week's Files report: Vatican says aliens could exist, Pyramids in Peru and Egypt Were Built by Cone Head aliens? Warning the Earth is Unstable, Space Travel Shorter Time Period Than Thought, Mars Invasion, March 2008 UFO Map, and Fire Fighters Guide Part #10, and Flogos Could be Mistaken for Actual UFOs.

Unidentified Aerial Phenomena were spotted over: Alabama, Arizona, California, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Maryland, New Mexico, New York Tennessee, Texas, and Washington.

UFOs were also seen in Argentina, Australia, Canada, Egypt, Netherlands, India, and the UK.

These Files assume that extraterrestrial intelligent life not only exists, but my hypothesis is that the over one hundred UFOs reported each week represent technologically advanced spacecraft conducting surveillance of Earth. It is my belief that God has spread intelligent civilizations throughout the universe and his messengers flew UFOs.

In the Living Bible, Jesus Christ predicts his return in the clouds. (UFOs)

"And the nations of the world will see me return in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. And I shall send forth my angels with sound of a mighty trumpet blast, and they shall gather the chosen ones from the farthest ends of the earth and heaven." Matthew 24-30 \

Vatican says aliens could exist

ROME — BBC News David Willey reports, The Pope's chief astronomer says that life on Mars cannot be ruled out. Writing in the Vatican newspaper, the astronomer, Father Gabriel Funes, said intelligent beings created by God could exist in outer space. Father Funes, director of the Vatican Observatory near Rome, is a respected scientist who collaborates with universities around the world. The search for forms of extraterrestrial life, he says, does not contradict belief in God. The official Vatican newspaper headlines his article 'Aliens Are My Brother'. Just as there are multiple forms of life on earth, so there could exist intelligent beings in outer space created by God. And some aliens could even be free from original sin, he speculates. Asked about the Catholic Church's condemnation four centuries ago of the Italian astronomer and physicist, Galileo, Father Funes diplomatically says mistakes were made, but it is time to turn the page and look towards the future. Weekly UFO Reports From Around The World

Remnants of at least ten pyramids have been discovered on the coast of Peru, marking what could be a vast ceremonial site of an ancient, little-known culture. In January construction crews working in the province of Piura discovered several truncated pyramids and a large adobe platform. Officials from Peru's National Institute of Culture (INC) were dispatched to inspect the discovery that could be the ruins of the legendary "lost city" of Paititi. The complex is 2 miles long and 1 mile wide, belonged to the ancient Vicús culture and was likely either a religious center or a cemetery for nobility. The Vicús civilization flourished in Peru's northern coastal desert from 1200 B.C to 300 A.D. and is known for its decorated ceramics.

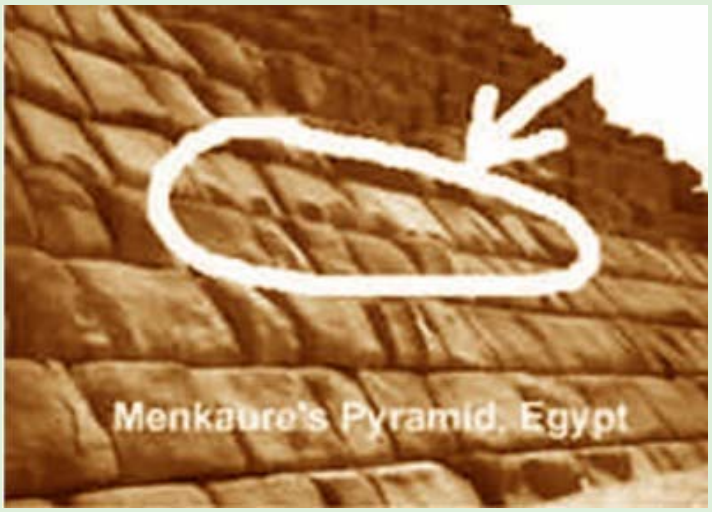
Ceramic Vessel 1200-200 B.C. National Museum of Archaeology, Anthropology, and History of Peru

The pyramids were likely damaged by frequent earthquakes in the region. Experts say little is known about the culture, because its sites have been heavily looted over the years. "We found several partial pyramids, at least ten," said César Santos Sánchez, chief archaeologist for INC's Piura division. "We also found a large adobe platform that we speculate could have been used for burial rituals. But we cannot know without further testing." Construction techniques in both Peru and Egypt indicate similar technology. Additionally the leaders with elongated cone heads in both civilizations had advanced technology and were teachers in many fields such as agriculture, ceramics, writing and advanced construction.

Paleoindian groups were regarded as the first human inhabitants of America

Cavemen for thousands of years hunted animals for food using flint spears. The flint stone Clovis Point shown above was their advanced technology. Suddenly, the cavemen who lived in groups of fifteen or twenty people left their homes and started farming. Wheat and certain crops were found and were farmed, fertilized, and elaborate irrigation methods were devised. They learned to write and wrote master pieces of scripture, build cities and pyramids.

Nearby is the powerful capital of the Inca empire was Cuzco, with construction techniques of great precision virtually the same as those in Egypt. The city was built in the shape of a sacred Puma with the megalithic fortress of Sacsayhuaman at the head. Francisco Pizarro led his Spanish conquistadors into Cuzco in 1533 and found a stunning city of great stone buildings, lavish palaces and temples. The Inca temples and treasures of gold and silver artwork were plundered. Although most Inca buildings were demolished, some stonework survived as foundations and walls of new colonial buildings and churches. Above are the remains of the Inca fortress of Sacsayhuaman. Below are similar stone construction in Egypt half a world away.



According to the study by Dr. John J. Von Tschudi, M.D, the three pre-Incan "nations or races" are the Chinchas, Aymaraes, and Huancas. With osteopathic precision, Dr. Tschudi illustrated clear structural differences between these three nations. He examinde hundreds of crania of the ancient inhabitants of that country." Skulls of the Chinchas were like normal humans but the Huancas had the most pronounced dolichocephalic traits, often called cone heads.

Ancient royalty in Tiahuanaco, Peru and Egypt with elongated skulls

The Aymaraes "commenced the dynasty of the Incas." Of the Aymaraes, Tschudi said, "The crania of these people present differences equally remarkable ... and particularly the contour of the cranium." Keeping in mind that Inca is a term venerating the emperors of Peru, not a tribe/nation per sé - the Aymaraes conquered the other two peoples and marshaled the unity of Inca civilization, not unlike requisite unification of early Upper/Lower Egypt. Similarly, this unity ultimately led to racial mixing. However, similar skull formations does suggest the Aymaraes and Huancas were genetically linked. I suggest this cone head like skulls are aliens who came to Earth. Anthropologists suggest the cone heads were caused by the Peruvian Indian practice of head-binding. Physicians refer to elongated skulls as Dolichocephaloids, but two mummies of babies less than a year old (analyzed in England) ... belonged to the Aymaraes tribe had elongated crania. Additionally, unborn seven month old foetus enclosed in the womb of a mummy of a pregnant woman had an elongated skull! I suggest these may be alien life forms.

Trident Sign Above Pacific Ocean Entrance to Peru

Incan legends claim that space people came from the heavens and taught them how to create a civilization. Along the Southern coast of Peru is the giant Trident symbol that provides entrance to the famous Nazca lines that can only be seen from the sea or air. Notice the Trident has a pyramid near its base and a disc shaped UFO at its top and was most likely used as an aid to navigation. I suggest the evidence indicates as the ancient scriptures claim the gods came from space and settled in Peru, China, Samaria, Malta, India, and various places around the world bringing writing, agriculture and advanced construction methods. CHAPTER 13: ENEMY ATTACK AND UFO POTENTIAL

Part 10

UFOs—EMERGENCY ACTION In view of the fact that many UFOlogists believe that we are fast approaching a time when overt landings of UFOs will become less remarkable, and in the absence of our knowing whether their visits are friendly or hostile, it would not be remiss to give some thought to the part that fire departments might play in the event of the unexpected arrival of UFOs in their communities. For example, what would be your course of action as an incident commander at the scene of a school ground where a UFO has crashed into the boiler room, rupturing a fuel line, and ignition has occurred in the spilling oil, endangering the occupants of the craft who are trapped in the wreckage? If your rescue attempts are successful, and two of the five small alien creatures are injured but still alive, how do you dispose of the dead and treat the survivors? How would the presence of children on the school grounds affect your actions? What persons and agencies would be notified? The authors have never read any advice on these matters. The following admonition was printed on the inside front jacket of Frank Edward's book on flying saucers:

Arizona ABC 15 News Reports on Fire Officer's Guide

http://au.youtube.com/watch?v=Mj1IQ8Lg0gQ

WARNING "Near approaches of UFOs can be harmful to human beings. Do not stand under a UFO that is hovering at low altitude. Do not touch or attempt to touch a UFO that has landed. In either case the safe thing to do is to get away from there very quickly and let the military take over. There is a possibility of radiation danger and there are known cases where persons have been burned by rays emanating from UFOs. Don't take chances with UFOs!" Thanks to William Kramer Ph.D and Charles W. Bahame, J.D.

Warning the Earth is Unstable

Cyclones and tidal waves have killed up to a 100,000 people in Myanmar, volcanoes erupting, and a massive devastating earthquake from Beijing to Bangkok measuring 7.8 killed 13,000 + in China. More devastating natural disasters are likely to occur. UFOs often seem to be predictors of catastrophe so watch the skies. If your animals are unusually nervous or run away, and your magnetic compass starts to swing erratically these are signs that you may be hit by an earthquake in your area. Almost every area in the world can be hit, often where least expected.

Space Travel Shorter Time Period Than Thought

The basis for the shortened trip in space is NASA scientist engineer's Paul R. Hills book "Unconventional Flying Objects" with a forward by astronaut Edgar Mitchell. Hill obtained numerous UFO reports at Langley Air Force Base where I was stationed. NASA was picking up evidence for alien bases on the Moon and the Shuttle was video-taping UFOs. He developed a chapter on space travel with the appropriate math. He states the trip to, "Aloha Centuri, a triple star system 4.3 light years away made by accelerating at 140 g to a v/c of 0.9999 is accomplished from a standing start to a standing finish in 6 weeks." He points out that aliens traveling from many of the 200 known planets could reach here in less than two years, the time it took Sir Francis Drake to go around the world.

Artist Depiction of Spaceship

Hill states, "I hope I have made it clear that there is an important distinction to be made between the time experienced by the space traveler and the time which passes meanwhile on the home planet and on the planetary destination. The tremendous acceleration, speed, and energy capabilities displayed by UFOs make them well suited to capitalize on this distinction by the attainment of greatly reduced on board times realizable by approaching the speed of light. Even an approach to 90 % of light speed gets the job done for the nearer stars. Higher fractions of light speed give attractive time reductions for longer trips. Don't be misled by countless statements in the literature that interstellar distances and the speed of light constitute some kind of barrier to space travel. There are only two paths to this conclusion:

1. Nobody in the universe has the technology to approach the speed of light.

2. Observer time is significant, and on board time is to be ignored.

Both paths are false ones. The confused second view is more common. Its proponents are using the observed time for light to travel as the shortest possible time for passage. Totally false". Pages 272 and 278. Thanks to NASA's Paul Hill.

Editor's Note: There are also strong indications large Mother ships are in this solar system and they have developed bases on the Moon, Earth, and on nearby planets.

Earth is preparing for an invasion of Mars, as a flotilla of space probes are assembling to storm our neighboring planet, with the latest in scientific equipment.

Their mission? To learn all they can about the red planet, and perhaps even answer the question of whether it harbours alien life. The Phoenix Lander is on its way to Mars right now, and should arrive at the Martian north pole on May 25. After this will come NASA's Mars Science Laboratory, a large rover that will launch next year and arrive in 2010. Finally, the European Space Agency's ExoMars mission is expected to hit the ground in 2014. Thanks to NASA

March 2008 UFO map

If the month of January always seems very active each year with UFO reports, the total numbers of reports then seem to wane in the spring, then build again in the beginning of summer, and increases dramatically for the rest of the calendar year. The month of March 2008 seems consistent with this observation. Overall, UFO reports seem down overall proportionally from region to region. Totals world wide by these maps - 397.

Northern California in March 2008 is seeing an increase in UFO reports, but the most dramatic seems a spike in reports in Indiana. The entire state of Indiana in March 2008 seems blanketed suddenly. The increase in the Midwest seems to have quieted down as well from the previous month. However, what we see on the maps are only what is actually reported.

There was a possible alien report of strange sounds from an animal from Fulton, Texas, March 28, 2008. High levels of UFO activity shift around dramatically month to month to new locations. These 'mini-flaps' will be brief...about 3 to 6 weeks of brief intensity. These mini-flap local reports will usually be at a level of intensity that are very disproportional related to the local population density. Flogos Could be Mistaken for Actual UFOs

LEXINGTON, Alabama - A special-effects entrepreneur from Alabama has come up with a way to fill the sky with foamy clouds as big as four feet across and shaped like corporate logos. Francisco Guerra, a former magician calls them, Flogos, the foamy clouds that can be made into virtually any shape and could be mistaken for UFOs. Guerra, developed a machine that produces tiny bubbles filled with air and a little helium that are can be formed into any foam shape and pumped into the sky. His company, Snowmasters Inc., makes machines that churn out fake snow for Hollywood films. The Walt Disney Co. will use one of the machines next month to send clouds shaped like Mickey Mouse into the in Orlando, Florida. They will be used initially in the US, UK and Australia. Arizona - Light Photo

– During a work conference on May 5, 2008, at about 11 PM, I was taking pictures for our company newsletter and I'm at a loss to explain this picture. I have never believed in UFOs though I respect the theory that something other than us could be out there. I know that the direction in which I took the shot was the direction of our hotel the Tempe Mission Palms. Behind the hotel is a small hill, but nothing more. There is no tower or church anywhere near the area. Also on the hill behind the hotel was what looked to be a radio tower with a parabolic antenna which could be clearly seen in the day time, but it was much farther and in another direction from where the object appears in my picture. I am a well educated woman and always try to explain everything logically, but I cannot do that this time. The pictures along with all the ones from my trip are still in my camera and I do not plan to delete them. Aside from the main object that caught my eye, there are two other lights near it which when you zoom into them, look similar to the larger object. I'm no expert, and hope you can help me shed some light on this.

Comments: The light is not the moon nor any other celestial object. There is a possibility that the light could be a reflection of a ground light on the clouds which are evident in the photo. The lowest layer of clouds was at 10,000 feet. Thanks to William Puckett UFOS Northwest http://ufosnw.com

California - Kite and UFOPhotos

SAN FRANCISO — My son and I were walking west bound on Marina Blvd adjacent to Golden Gate Nation Recreation Area taking pictures of kites. I don't remember seeing the object during our walk and only noticed it on May 9, 2008 while looking back through pictures we had taken.

DANA POINT — This is a picture I took during a photo op at the Ritz Carlton Dana Point on May 6, 2008. This is one of 26 photos, and this is the only one with this object in it. I am a professional photographer with over 500,000 actuations on this Nikon d2x 14-24 mm lens camera. Never have I had an object like this in one of my pictures.

MURPHYSBORO — On May 5, 2008, about 9:50 PM, my daughter and I were coming home from her ball game traveling on Rt. 149 coming into De Soto when I saw an object that was brighter than an airplane. Joking with my daughter, I said, "Hey, look! There's a UFO". We watched it and as we got closer realized it was not moving. It was just hovering above the tree line and made no noise. It started to move so we turned down a back road to follow it then it disappeared. We kept looking but could not see it and decided to continue home. Thanks to Brian Vike, Director of HBCC UFO Research, http://www.hbccufo.org

On May 9, 2008, at 9:45 PM, Saturn was out of view from backyard, started looking for other planets. At 10: PM, I came across another object blinking oval, red, blue, green, white in plain view. But, with Barlow lens 2x with 4mm lens Celestron 130 SLT took this photo. I saw the same thing a few weeks ago, but didn't have camera set up. It seems to speed up then vanishes. I am determined to get a better picture, but with a telescope it's trying to catch it in a pin head. I was a skeptic, not anymore, unnerving to say the least. Will keep you posted. Thanks to MUFON CMS.

Illinois - UFO Flyby

BATAVIA — I use the term UFO as unidentified. I was leaving work still on the work site at Fermilab near the main ring on May 8, 2008. My co-worker and I both saw something flying past close to us. It was at a low altitude. I got a photo but I don't know how good it came out. It was sort of kite shaped with a pod dangling underneath. It appeared to be smaller than an ultra light and it was moving under its own power. My thoughts were it was some sort of remote controlled drone. It was moving at a good rate of speed and after I slowed down and turned to get a look at it the thing changed directions and speed off. I believe it to be manmade terrestrial origin, but it was odd. Thanks to MUFON CMS

ARLINGTON HEIGHTS — I live about 10 miles from O'Hare International airport and see thousands of airplanes taking off and landing daily. This flying craft was sitting in a fixed position in the sky over my friend's neighborhood for about 1-2 minutes on April 3, 2008, and then started to slowly hover farther away. My friend and I followed the craft for as long as we could then lost it in sight. I dropped my friend off who lives close by and started to drive home, and saw the flying craft again about ¼ mile away. I drove as fast as I could and was able to get directly below the flying craft. It looked nothing like a typical plane and appeared to be multiple cigar shaped tubes all connected to one main base. It had different sets of lights that were blinking in order. Directly below this slow moving craft there was almost ZERO sound coming from it. Most airplanes around here even 5-10,000 feet you can still hear taking off and landing from far distances.

This Craft was also able to fly straight upwards and take off very fast then it would slow down and go lower. After I lost the sighting of the first craft I saw three other crafts of the same design hovering slowly over our neighborhood. I would like to know why soundless aircrafts are being flown very low around my neighborhood. Thanks to Peter Davenport Director www.ufocenter.com

Indiana - Very Dimly Lit, Low Flying Silent Triangle

EVANSVILLE — On April 2, 2008, at 8:40 PM, I was on the telephone in my 3rd floor apartment balcony when I saw a triangular shaped dimly lit object in a clear sky. As I spoke on the phone to my friend it flew over the apartment building at a steady but somewhat slow pace on a northwest trajectory. It only seemed to be about 200 to 300 feet above the ground and not very large. It made absolutely no sound. I watched in astonishment and relayed what I was seeing to my friend via phone. When geese fly overhead they honk!

This also fails to explain the LIGHTED nature of what I had seen. It was almost like a kite with very dimly lit lights along its edges, possibly six if you count the point. It was so dimly lit in fact that if not for the motion of it I may not have noticed it at all. I called my mother in Louisiana to describe the event to her and once again I spotted movement in the northwest and saw the same object taking a "nosedive" downward for about 5 seconds and then once again disappear.

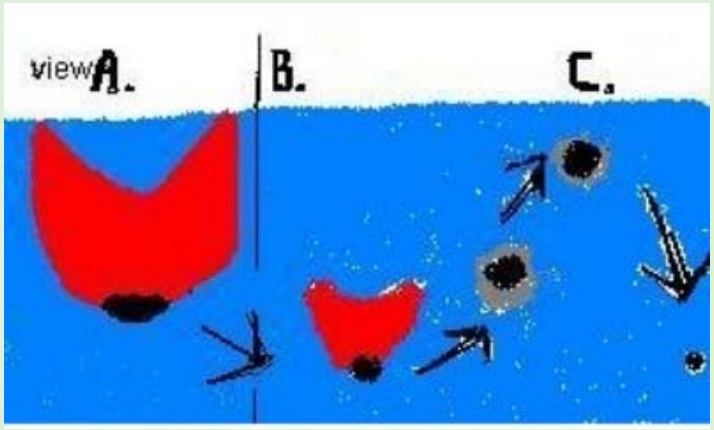
Maryland - Sighting

TOWSON — Steve Tobias writes, "This image recorded on your Filer Files in the above photos are similar, but much larger than what I witnessed on September 19, 2007." The object above in your newsletter # 13 - 2008 has an unusual shape for flight motion in Earth's atmosphere, but I notice it has same video recording equipment ? I saw it very up close and personal hovering over a yard. I submit an art painting below of what I saw and how it altered shape as it moved off after hovering for about two and a half minutes directly above me at an angle of 45 degrees. The distance from me to the object I cannot estimate but I do not think it was very large and may have been as small as the size of a large crow.



As it approached, flight characteristics were as a butterfly in motion but the wings were not moving like a butterfly... It was motionless in the final hover that lasted a minute or so. I was trying to understand what I was seeing. The object was 50 to 75 feet above me and moved away not altering its position, almost as if it was letting the wind carry it away. There was a strong, steady wind that day around 1:00 PM in a cloudless sky. It proceeded away at 25 mph and seemed to alter shape, then increased speed beyond 40 - 60 mph until out of sight. The observer has been a UFO Researcher since 1991 and is a veteran of the US Air Force. Thanks to Steve Tobias .

New Mexico - Photos

ALBUQUERQUE — I was set up in the desert west of Rio Rancho, with my telescope video recording system on February 10, 2008. I have been documenting plasma and UFO phenomena with my Celestron 8 inch Newtonian Reflector video system on the edge of the Sandia mountains. I arrived at the site about 3 miles north west of Petroglyph National Park and at 8:15 PM, and noticed a very bright odd "star" to the south at an elevation of about 30 degrees. My background is in Geophysics and I am an expert in the field of imaging spectroscopy. I routinely use forward models of the atmosphere to remove the absorption and scattering effects of the atmosphere so that this "hyperspectral" data can be analyzed. This technical background informs the following analysis:

1) The optical depth at this slant elevation obscured the star field due to scattering and absorption so that this "star" was the only one visible in the sky.

2) The spectral emission of this star was uncharacteristic of stars that I have observed. There were high frequency variations of highly saturated colors from blue all the way through red.

3) The area of the star viewed through the C8 NGT was much larger than typical stars. I later calculated the area to be about 1000 connected pixels in contrast to the typical star in this telescope between 30-50 pixels. Thus it was 20-30 times bigger than any star I have observed.

The "star" was moving slowly to the west as stars do in the night sky so I had to move the telescope every few minutes to keep the "star" in the field of view (FOV). I recorded about 90 minutes before my power supply ran out. I spent the next month processing the first 10 minutes of this data to produce the video on my YouTube site called "Plasma UFO Mothership", AKA "Space Time Metro".

The primary means of camouflage used by the device is radiant intensity designed to saturate most video and still cameras. Once saturated there is nothing that can be done to eliminate this obscuration. Observations: After careful review of this data here are my observations:

1) This is a very sophisticated device, likely of extraterrestrial origin.

2) This is without a doubt not a star.

3) Space vehicles appear within the device as compact forms and transform into recognizable shapes moving out of the plasma field.

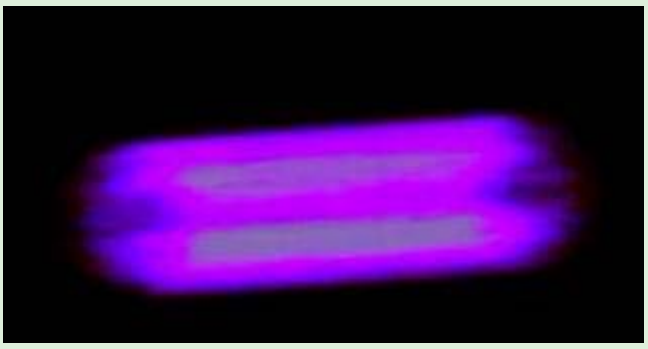
4) Space vehicles arrive at the device, move into the interior and mutate into compact forms before disappearing.

5) The inner workings of the device appear to be like a giant computer motherboard.

6) This motherboard varies in configuration at a very high frequency, much greater than video frame rates.

7) The device camouflages itself using a combination of radiant energy and strategic placement to appear star-like.

Analysis (Witnesses Opinion):



1) This device is a massive transit portal moving space vehicles.

2) It is probably connected to larger devices in space for interstellar transport or other similar devices in the Earths atmosphere in other locations.

3) This portal is probably a synthetic wormhole allowing undetected transport over great distances.

4) This device is related to a companion video "Plasma UFO Wormhole" that documents surface portals that serve as near surface metro stations connected to the mothership. I will submit a second report of this surface component of the mass transit system that is used to move space vehicles without detection. Please see the attached video frames and visit my YouTube site so see the video "Plasma UFO Mothership" AKA "Space Time Metro. http://www.youtube.com/portigalf

BROOKLYN — Early evening on April 26, 2008, I'm guessing around 8:30 PM, I was out on my terrace on Pacific Street in Prospect Heights, Brooklyn and something caught my eye moving slowly from east to west. At first it looked like a bunch of metallic party balloons tied together with light from the surrounding buildings shining off of them. As the object got closer I realized it was higher in the sky than I had thought and there was no way the little light would be reflecting of the balloons that brightly and constantly. Thanks to Brian Vike, Director of HBCC UFO Research, http://www.hbccufo.org

EAST BERNE — My wife and I are school bus drivers and I was riding with her on her late run at 5:10 PM, on Monday May 12, 2008, when one of two 9 year old students pointed it out. We stopped and luckily I had my digital camera and took two photos. The object was in the middle of some low level cirrus type clouds and in the southern horizon above the top of a mountain range. In the short time that we observed it it did not appear to move much. As we drove away it appeared to fade or not be visible from a different angle. Thanks to MUFON CMS

Tennessee - Crop Circle

MADISONVILLE —I found out about a crop circle formation in Eastern Tennessee because it was in my Grandma Helm's field. I was surprised to find on your front page a UFO sighting on the night of May 6, 2008. The crop circle was found the day before. Here is the story: http://www.volunteertv.com/strangenews/headlines/18699024.html
Maybe the crop circle is related to UFO sighting. Click here to read witness reports of crop circle.
Comments: UFOs Northwest does not have the resources to investigate crop circles. According to the newscast some crop circle investigators have been alerted, but, there is some doubt that the investigators may be granted access to the field. Note: The witness is referring to the black triangle sighting that occurred on May 6, 2008 at Greeneville, Tennessee. Click here to read this report. Rear of object.

RIPLEY — I was driving down Highway 51 on April 26, 2008, 50 miles NE of Memphis and looked up toward the sky at what I thought was a shooting star. I kept watching and all of a sudden the object shot out a BIG ball of light and immediately a triangular shaped object appeared. The two triangles were side by side at 8:49 PM. Underneath each triangle were lights. The lights were red, green, yellow and blue. The triangles just sat there and hovered next to each other. UNLIKE a plane the object did not travel across the sky until it went out of sight. It VANISHED into thin air. This object was flying very low to the ground. You could see what appeared to me to look like rivets inside the circled lights. This is how close it was. I am not one to have ever believed in this whole UFO thing, but I know what I saw was not from this earth.
Comments: This is one of many of reports that our organization has received of triangular shaped objects this year. However, the observation that two objects ejected out of another object is most unusual. Thanks to William Puckett UFOS Northwest http://ufosnw.com

Texas - Large Dark Cigar Shaped Craft

ORANGE — Clouds were rolling in just ahead of a front due in our area. I was traveling north on HWY 1130 on April 1, 2008, at about 11;20 AM. As I glanced ahead and down the road my attention was drawn to a dark object in the clouds moving at a higher than normal rate of speed, also at an altitude of about 500 or 600 feet. The object moved from west to east and seemed to accelerate as it turned rapidly to the north and I lost it though the tree line. If it had had two rotors, it could have been one of those large lifting choppers the military uses, but there were no rotors or wings of any kind. Thanks to Peter Davenport Director www.ufocenter.com
DALLAS – On May 5, 2008, at 2:45 AM, I started watching this light going back and forth for several minutes, so I start taping it for almost three minutes. I can see the light on the video that traveled several times crossing the sky. Thanks to Brian Vike, Director of HBCC UFO Research, http://www.hbccufo.org

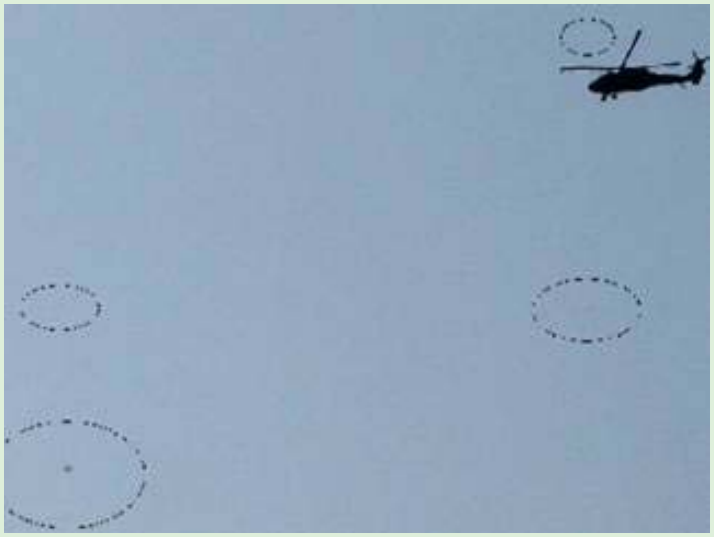
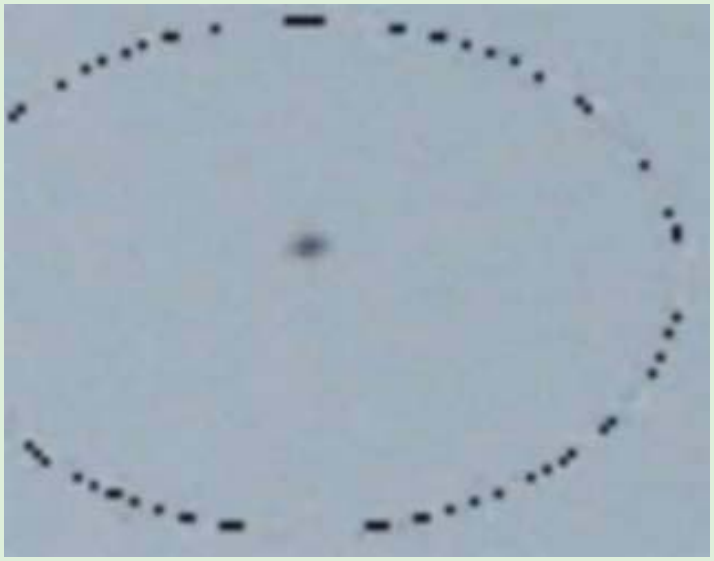
Washington - Helicopters and UFOs



I didn't see anything but the helicopters flying up close on May 4, 2008, but when I looked at them on the computer I saw the dots and wondered what they were. One of the dots looked very interesting,



I've seen that one on the TV before. That's when I think I figured out what they could be. I was looking west when I heard the helicopters coming and ran into the house and grabbed my camera a Canon Power Shot S2 1S 5.0 mega pixels. I think for the first time I may have caught something interesting. Thanks to MUFON CMS

MT RAINIER PARK — On May 8, 2008, about 1 PM, my brother and I plus several others at a roadside stop in Mt Rainier Park saw two UFO's. I was able to take only one picture, but it is a good picture. Then the UFOs shot straight up and puff they were gone. It was life changing! I now believe! We have proof positive that there is life other than our own. I am 52 and my brother is 41. We are normal grown men who were lucky enough to have a picture so people won't think we are wackos. We live about 4 miles from the main entrance to the state park and see a lot of strange traffic going into the park late at night and early morning.

Comments: This report takes on special importance, because two unknown aerial objects were witnessed by several people in daytime. Skies were cloudy, and an excellent photograph was taken. Analysis has indicated that the photo has not been edited by any software. A Fujifilm S5200, 5.1 megapixel camera was used to take the photo. The witness stated that flash was not used. This fact plus the fact that the sun was not out eliminates "glare" as the cause of the objects in the photo. In addition, the objects were seen by several witnesses. Argentina Flap - 110 UFO Reports This Year in Argentina since the January INEXPLICATA

BUENOS AIRES — Raul Oscar Chaves writes: During the second half of January 2008, David V. toured the city and took numerous images and he noticed that some of them contained unknown objects that were not detected at the time that the photo was taken. He used a 7.1 mpix Kodak EasyShare. http://uk.youtube.com/watch?v=Nm54fk9lDc0

MALARGUE — Félix Fernandez, Omar Gonzalez and Virgilio Moreno, workers at the Provincial Highway Authority were returning from La Junta toward Malargue, Mendoza on April 3, 2008. Fernandez took pictures of the landscape with his cell phone at 18:50 hours, of a strange flying- disk shaped object that appeared out of nowhere and maneuvered in front of the sun. It flew over the area for 15 minutes until standing still for a moment and losing itself toward the west in the El Chacal region. This allowed several photos to be taken of it. The episode was retold by Fernandez himself on Alvear's Radio 1. Analyses performed by our specialist, Jorge Luis Figueiras, show a typical solid "saucer" shape with interesting contours and edges, similar to the ones photographed with cellphones at El Chocon and Santiago del Estero in 2008. Australia - Light Flashing Different Colors

MOURA, QUEENSLAND – Three of us have observed UFOs between April 27 and May 7, 2008, nightly from 8 PM, to 4 AM. They are shaped like a bright star, but have flashing red, green/blue and white lights. They appear to accelerate, show colored lights, then disappear and then reappear in different locations usually in the west. The lights continue to flash, move, for over 20 minute periods to different locations. They are also seen in the Gladstone Tannum Sands area. Thanks to Brian Vike, Director of HBCC UFO Research, http://www.hbccufo.org

Canada - Sighting Silver Object

PORT AUX BASQUES, NEWFOUNDLAND — I looked up and saw a silver object in the sky on April 7, 2008, at 4:00 AM. There were no lights emitted from object. It looked almost like the craft from the movie "flight of the navigator". The object a nice distance away, then it moved to the left of us to almost out of sight 20 times faster the stealth bomber with no vapor trail. It stopped for a few seconds then it went up and stopped again. It was silver and flew a triangle flight pattern. I told my mother who was driving and she stopped the car and we both watched it repeat the same pattern several times. I said, "There is nothing we have on this planet that can move that fast and to be able to make a sudden stop like that." I have been to air shows and nothing we have even comes close to how this thing was able to move. It then flew towards Nova Scotia and out of sight. Thanks to Brian Vike, Director of HBCC UFO Research, http://www.hbccufo.org

LONDON, ONTARIO — While standing outside on my front porch on May 8, 2008, at 9:47 PM, facing north, waving goodbye to my girlfriend, I noticed a bright ring of lights, stationary in the clear sky. It looked to have a circle of white lights around the perimeter of the bottom of the object. I could not tell if the object was a center-less ring or a disc as the lights seemed to be illuminating the surrounding atmosphere or possibly illuminating the haze of clouds beneath the ring of lights. The light was a soft pure white and was constant with no fluctuations in brightness. Thanks to Brian Vike, Director of HBCC UFO Research , http://www.hbccufo.org

SOUTH WINDSOR, ONTARIO — I just saw it fly over, the size of a penny in the sky on May 10, 2008, at 1:30 PM. It was dark color a walnut shaped UFO and it was flying from north to south and it made a 90 degree turn to east and was gone. No sound. Thanks to Brian Vike, Director of HBCC UFO Research, http://www.hbccufo.org

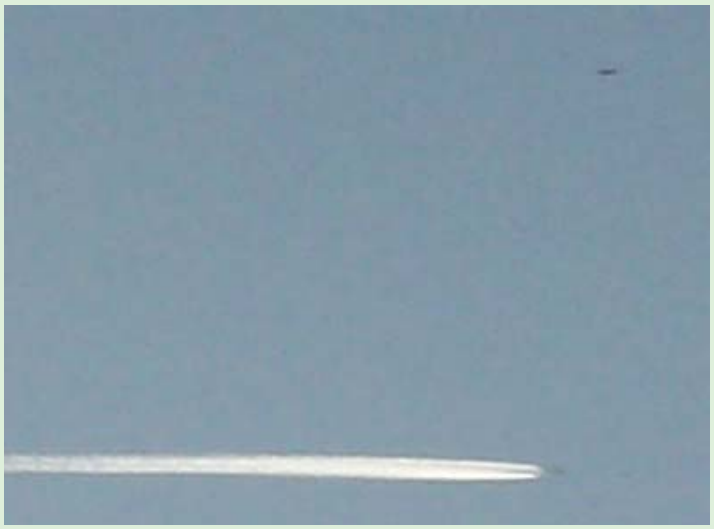
Egypt Photos

CAIRO — I m taking almost every clear day 500...2000 continuous shots of the sky on May 14, 2008.

Photos are taken at 10x zoom, nothing unusual noticed with naked eye. Thanks to MUFON CMS

Netherlands Photos



Utrecht – The witness captured this photo on May 10, 2008, at 1605 hours. Thanks to MUFON CMS

Pradesh, India - A Humanoid Being

VIZAG CITY — A strange unexplained activity on beach at Vizag city in India. On two occasions first in January of 2006, and the other in November 2007, I saw a human like thing appear on the beach. It appeared like a person naked or with underwear on coming out of the water, walking on beach and suddenly picking up speed and running at super human speed. The first sighting was past midnight near Tennati Park Beach and second time I saw it was in the afternoon around 3 PM at Tatlakonda Beach. On these both occasions I have other friends with me who saw it. Thanks to Brian Vike, Director of HBCC UFO Research , http://www.hbccufo.org

U.K. England - Multiple Bright Lights Oval

TORQUAY AND PRESTON — There seems to have been something interesting happening over the weekend of 26 - 28 April above these English coastal towns which is some three miles away from Paignton, where another minor sighting took place. The reports all started with my own report to the press. I witnessed strange lights in the sky over my house on April 26, 2008. Following the press report, other instances came to light. I was intrigued enough to follow them up and visit all ten parties concerned. At least eight objects possibly ovoid shaped bright lights, one had a squashed bell appearance were observed. Thanks to Brian Vike, Director of HBCC UFO Research, http://www.hbccufo.org

KIDSGROVE, STOKE ON TRENT – On May 6, 2008, at 11:20 PM, I was driving home on a clear night, when I saw a white/yellow oval shape a few miles high in the sky. It was virtually stationary for a second or two then suddenly moved away and disappeared out of sight within milliseconds. It wasn't a passenger aircraft because the light was completely different. It was not any meteor/comet because it had no tail? Thanks to Brian Vike, Director of HBCC UFO Research, http://www.hbccufo.org

WHITCHURCH, BRISTOL — I first saw a plane flying with a vapor trail heading southwest on May 8, 2008, at 8.35 AM. Then this white oval disc shaped object caught my eye traveling in a similar south westerly direction as the plane at about 2,000 feet. The speed was probably that of a plane too. I watched it for a minute or so and tried to get my son to see it. When I tried to locate it again it was gone. Thanks to Brian Vike, Director of HBCC UFO Research, http://www.hbccufo.org

FOO FIGHTERS

The Secret Report Ordered I

By William Knell

Growing up as the son of a retired Air Force Officer in the 1960s was fascinating. I was born late in the lives of my parents, so most of what I remember happened after my father retired and started a new career. I do recall a tiny bit of the time when he was still on active duty, but it's the stories I heard about UFOs after his retirement that still fascinate me.

Being around retired Air Force Pilots and Officers and hearing their stories was an amazing experience. Because I was born in the late 1950s and grew up in the 1960s, the topic seemed to come up all the time as a result of massive press coverage in those days. When it did, some of my father's friends and former Air Force associates would discuss their own experiences with Flying Saucers.

It was one thing to hear an untrained observer describe a UFO sighting, but it was another to hear military pilots that had flown the most advanced jets of their day talk about encountering these unknown objects in the sky. I can honestly say that I am certain not one of their stories was fabricated or embellished. If anything, they were probably understated.

Before he switched to the Air Force in 1947, my father was an Army Officer. As a result of having successfully organized a slipshod system of handling and disbursing supplies in various parts of the Pacific, he was asked to join General Douglas MacArthur's Staff in 1943. Years later, my father talked about those days with his friends from that time whenever they stopped by to see him.

Most of their conversations were above my head, but by the time I was nine years old I began to understand some of the things they were talking about. Apart from stories told about UFOs and other things by his pilot friends, many of his World War II buddies talked with him about the time they spent serving in the pacific and some of those stories fascinated me.

My parents didn't use profanity in our home, but when my father and his friends got together and wanted to swap war stories, the language got a bit rough so they would go out in our backyard and talk around the barbeque which was out of the neighbor's earshot away from the house. Although I wasn't welcome to sit in on those sessions, I sat quietly in our kitchen with the window open and still managed to hear most every word thanks to our backyard acoustics.

Although my father's friends had differing opinions about the Supreme Allied Commander in the South Pacific, General Douglas MacArthur was a name well-respected in our home. As far as his personal experiences go, my father didn't like talking about his wartime exploits with me. It had been a painful for him and I knew that he saw a lot of death. However, he was certain that given the limited choices, resources and supplies that the Allied Forces had available to defeat the Imperial Japanese Military, MacArthur had made the right decisions.

When the subject of Foo Fighters came up, I didn't know what they were and it didn't help that my father and his friends often used other terms to describe them. It was only after listening to Long John Nebel and Frank Edwards radio broadcasts and recordings that I understood them to be some sort of UFOs seen by military pilots on both sides during World War II.

During most discussions about the Foo Fighters or related phenomenon, my father would mention something about MacArthur's Report to his buddies. I had no idea what he was talking about and finally decided to speak with him about it. I think I was close to twelve years old at the time and he wasn't thrilled to find out about my eavesdropping.

Although I knew that my father's head was still filled with lots of secrets and things he wouldn't talk about concerning his military service, he did give me a thumbnail sketch about the Foo Fighters and subsequent investigations. He said that by the time he joined MacArthur's Staff in 1943, the General was seriously concerned about reports of strange lights and metallic-looking objects that shadowed or even chased Allied Aircraft.

MacArthur felt these were not Japanese or German Aircraft, reconnaissance devices or secret weapons. He based that opinion on the fact that intelligence reports indicated that Japan Pilots were experiencing the same phenomenon and had no idea what they were. As a result of that information, MacArthur ordered an investigation into the Foo Fighter encounters in the Pacific.

Since Allied Pilots were already routinely debriefed after their missions, it didn't take a great deal of time or effort to ask those that spotted Foo Fighters a few extra questions or have them make drawings of what they saw. That information became the foundation for MacArthur's Report.

After the war ended, captured Japanese war records confirmed that the Foo Fighters had also been seen by Japanese and German Pilots wherever they flew. It certainly wasn't a phenomenon limited to the South Pacific. The Germans even told the Japanese that they could not be American aircraft or observation devices because they had managed to down or capture some.

Foo Fighters

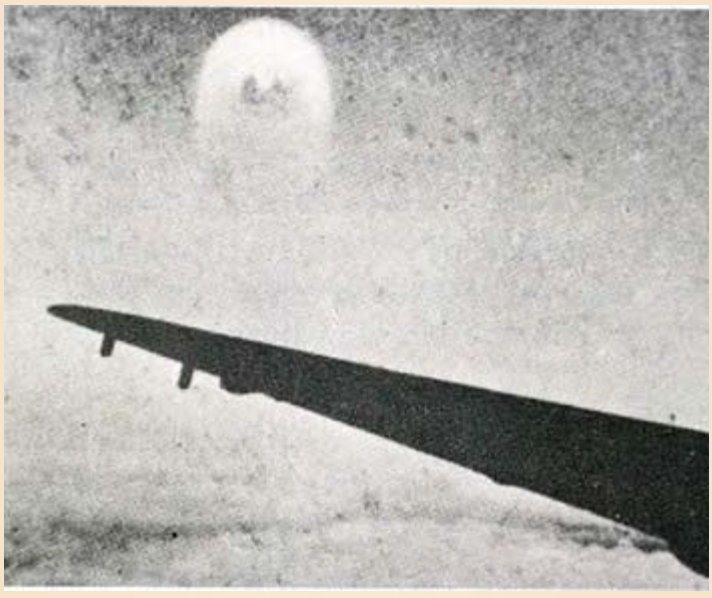
The Germans believed the technology they found inside these unknown objects was way beyond anything humanly possible at that time. While this might have been more bragging then fact, it does coincide with documents later found in Axis war files by the CIA that indicated the Germans had captured UFOs during the war and were trying to reverse engineer them.

By the time it was finished in the late 1940s, McArthur's Report on the Foo Fighters was over 10,000 pages long. That may not sound like much in terms of government paperwork, but that was merely the information collected. Descriptions and drawings were included without any additional comments. The sightings and encounters hadn't ended, but there was simply no more time or funds for further investigations as far as that particular report was concerned.

My father said that MacArthur was convinced the devices described in the report were of unknown and possibly extraterrestrial origin. Before it was even completed, the report was classified to prevent it from falling into the hands of our allies or enemies. The Joint Chiefs were provided with copies of the report while it was still a work in progress and were said to be greatly concerned about the content. I seriously doubt that it was shared with the CIA or any other intelligence gathering services inside or outside of the U.S. Government.

Although many of the commanding officers serving in the military hierarchy in Washington, D.C. did not particularly like or admire General MacArthur, they knew it would a mistake to ignore anything he passed their way. Most either dismissed or could not intellectually accept MacArthur's extraterrestrial theory about the origin of the Foo Fighters, but not all.

General Hoyt Vandenberg served as the Air Force Chief of Staff from 1948 until 1953 and died in 1954.According to my father, Vandenberg was extremely concerned about all things UFO and hated Project Blue Book with a passion. He believed that UFOs could become a serious threat to national security and despised wasting Air Force time, money and personnel on a half-hearted investigation like Blue Book.



Despite what seemed like a honest endeavor by Captain Edward J. Ruppelt to use the Blue Book team as a serious investigative effect into the UFO phenomenon during those days, he missed the point that it was never designed to accomplish that task. It was meant to placate public concern about the phenomenon and nothing more. Either way, Vandenberg had other ideas.

Although he never said it, my father gave me the impression that Vandenberg knew everything the government could have known about UFOs and Aliens in the late 1940s and early 1950s. He and other military leaders used the power given to them by the creation of the National Security Act of 1947 as a springboard to secretly exercise control over the extraterrestrial situation.

MacArthur was a warrior and a patriot, but no friend of secret government agencies or military alliances on power trips. He once said, "I am concerned for the security of our great Nation; not so much because of any threat from without, but because of the insidious forces working from within." I believe that this attitude placed him out of the loop when it came to actual decisions regarding the military and UFOs that didn't directly involve his command.

Vandenberg had been the U.S. Chief of Military Intelligence during World War II, served as Air Force Chief of Staff and Director of the CIA among other things. That made him the king of the mountain when it came to UFO information during and after World War II. His son, Major General Hoyt S. Vandenberg Jr, may have felt the same way his dad did about UFOs and Blue Book. If memory serves, he met my father at the War College when he spoke there in 1968 and later called my father in 1969 to express disgust at the Blue Book findings and how they embarrassed the Air Force.

As of this writing, the government will not acknowledge that any report by General MacArthur regarding Foo Fighters or UFOs exists or ever did exist. Because I only heard my father use the term 'Foo Fighters' a few times, it's possible that they had a different military designation. Without knowing that designation, it would be nearly impossible to track down any related documents that might lead to the larger Report as a whole. Most wartime documents involving MacArthur are still classified anyway.

When my father and his friends discussed World War II encounters between pilots and UFOs, they called them lights, mystery lights, ghost lights, ghosts, unknowns, bogies, slippery tracers, recon echoes and other things I can't remember or repeat. Most of these were probably slang terms created by pilots and never made it into the official paperwork. Finding just one document from or related to that report would be almost impossible. I also have to assume that any single page or grouping of pages not physically included in the final MacArthur Report was probably destroyed.

The first time I publicly discussed MacArthur's Report was in the sixth grade. After talking about it with my dad and coming up with more information on the Foo Fighters, I gave a verbal presentation about UFOs for my sixth grade class and casually mentioned the report. I had spent years listening to teachers talk about how silly

Flying Saucers were and how it always seemed to be untrained observers that reported seeing them. I figured it was time to inject a little reality into the classroom by discussing pilot sightings.

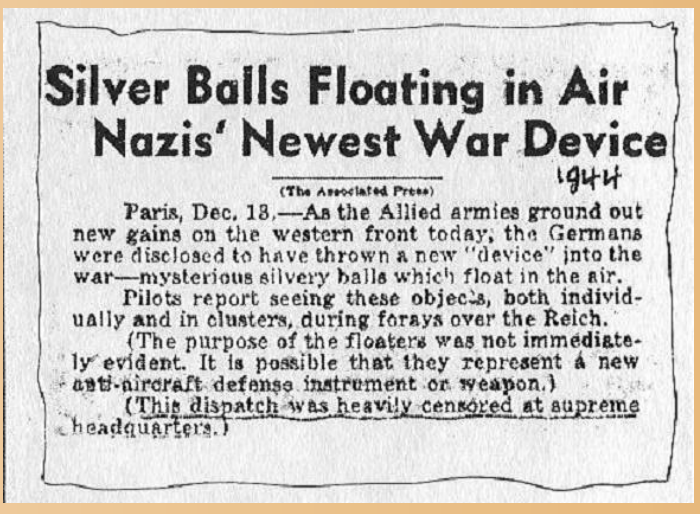
Although I knew my teacher would hate it and most of the class would probably think I was a freak, I went ahead with my presentation. My teacher sent me to the office after I finished speaking and got me in trouble with my father. He was summoned to the school to explain my irrational take on UFOs and mention of a classified report that no one ever heard about.

My father arrived at the school, spent a few minutes with the Principal and told me he would speak with me later. I was returned to my classroom. I doubt he said much to the Principal, but later that night we spoke and he said that I should have chosen a different subject and kept my mouth shut about the report. He didn't say it in a mean way, so I got the impression he meant that my teacher and the students didn't have enough information to believe or disbelieve anything about UFOs.

When I returned to my classroom, my teacher was still annoyed. She was the kind of person that believed anything and everything written in a science book. She spent the rest of the afternoon explaining how unlikely it was to expect any extraterrestrial life forms that might exist to find their way to Earth. Despite her narrow-minded view, it hadn't rubbed off on the students.

My classmates surprised me. After school and for the next day or two most of them came up to me and started asking more about UFOs and Aliens. Most were fans of the Star Trek TV Series which was extremely popular among young people by that time. That show had already aired episodes about time travel, aliens visiting the Earth and military secrecy surrounding UFO encounters.

I got the distinct impression that a few of my classmates had their own UFO or Alien encounters, but none of them admitted it. However, two guys in my class had fathers that had recently been in the Air Force. One of the boys came up to me the day after my report and said that his father thought our class ought to talk more about UFOs. The other boy told me that his father had a UFO sighting. That boy invited me to his house for dinner and I accepted.



Silver Balls Floating in Air
Nazis' Newest War Device

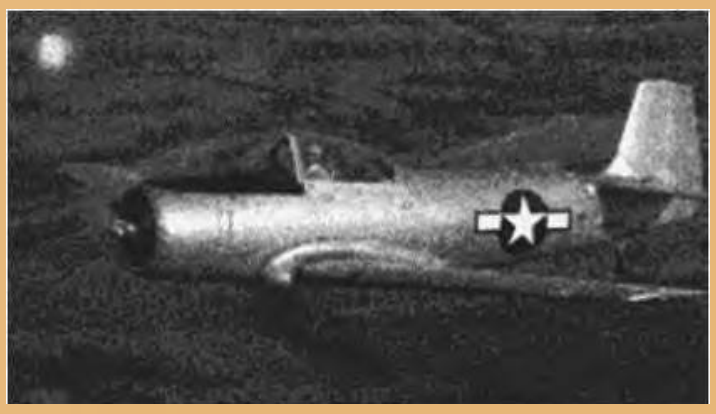
(The Associated Press) 1944

Paris, Dec. 18.—As the Allied armies ground out new gains on the western front today, the Germans were disclosed to have thrown a new "device" into the war—mysterious silvery balls which float in the air.

Pilots report seeing these objects, both individually and in clusters, during forays over the Reich.

(The purpose of the floaters was not immediately evident. It is possible that they represent a new anti-aircraft defense instrument or weapon.)

(This dispatch was heavily censored at supreme headquarters.)



His parents were young compared to mine and I could see his dad was very interested in UFOs. Now working as an airline pilot, he couldn't bring the subject up at work. He starting asking me about them during dinner. After telling him a few UFO stories that I heard from military pilots, he shared his own experience. His wife, two sons and I listened eagerly.

From what I recall, he said that he was flying a C130 over Norton Air Force Base (California) in 1966 and saw a classic daylight disc as he as about to land. He only saw it for a few seconds, but others on the ground got a better look and the thing sent the entire Base into a spin. After he landed, anyone and everyone in authority asked him if he saw anything. He told them that he thought he saw something, but couldn't be sure what it was. I assumed he didn't want to deal with the consequences of reporting a sighting and wisely decided to clam up.

After dinner, my parents came to pick me up and were invited in for coffee and desert. I mentioned the UFO story and my classmate's dad gladly retold it for my father's benefit. He knew that my father had been someone important in the Air Force and I guess he wanted his opinion on it. After hearing the story, my father mentioned that the Air Force was testing new technology for C-130s and other aircraft at Norton around that time. He said that the sighting might have been something that could have been explained, but either way, it could not have been openly discussed.

Before the former Air Force pilot could react, my father smiled and said it was time to go. I think the pilot got his message that it was probably something that might be considered unidentified, but not as far as the Air Force was concerned. For the purpose of that occasion, my father was reciting the Party Line of using new technology and secret aircraft testing as an excuse for explaining away a UFO sighting. Asking him anything further would merely receive the same response, even if it were worded differently.

As you can imagine, incidents like this made growing up in those days interesting to say the least. However, it was also very frustrating because I was presented with two realities: What I knew or suspected to be true and what I was told by teachers, the news media and the government to be true. I believe that's why I started reading about UFOs and investigating the paranormal in my teens. Even today, I still have some really interesting stories to tell that must wait to be told until those involved come forward or pass on.

The Quiet Little Warning That Makes A Loud Rumble

by Ronnie McMullen
Author of SOLD OUT WARNING

As host of The Prophetic Watch radio program, I have had some interesting schooling. The search for truth is always a quest and sifting through the many interviews can be tiresome and frustrating. I am always flabbergasted at the American public and how the people of this great country, either don't care, based probably on fear, or they are lost in the worship of themselves (as they live their "take care of myself" life). As the author of, Sold Out Warning, I did not write this book for fame and fortune. One might want to author such titles as, How to Get Rich Without Stealing, or, Build a Body to Flaunt in Thirty Days. These titles may reward you with riches and fame, but I tell you, writing the truth will always be controversial because the people of this world do not want the truth. If you stretch beyond the titles of "Self" and venture beyond into another dimension like "UFO's, Aliens, and Government Cover-Ups", now you stand on thin ice.

My book was recently reviewed by a local-yocal website called Alien Trucker. The critic named Rocky was a nice guy, but had more interest in smoking marijuana and tearing down my book, than listening to its content! I was saddened to hear how uneducated this critic was, and even more saddened by this man's priorities (smoking illegal substances). Is this a representation of America? And let's not forget that I include ancient scriptures in my book to bring more truth to this very unknown and very secretive subject.

I now move our thoughts to something more stimulating. Is the BIG SECRET being prepared for a premiere showing? Something along the lines of War of The Worlds? Or is the title something like Close Encounters of an Unexplained Kind? While some of us are smoking dope and killing brain cells, and running over mankind to build our empires, I have to hold on to the belief that some of us know something is coming. . . and our eyes are wide open! Maybe we can't explain what we are feeling, but we just have a knowing. Like myself, I lean on the truths that our next war will not be a natural war, but a huge spiritual war that most will never see coming.

For years now, I have known about the union between aliens and the shadow government. Those who need drugs will argue that everyone is lying and that there is no shadow government. If you do not stay on top of the laws that are being passed secretly, you might need to join Rocky in his smoking habit just to cope with living in a concentration camp. Senate Bill 1959 is the "gag law" for all truth tellers. If this law passes, many radio shows and independent authors will be forced to shut-up, or be put away in prison. CNN and Fox will be void of this law because they never tell the truth. Their motto is: "We report, you decide." In other words, here's the propaganda. How much do you believe?

I want to share an excerpt out of my book Sold Out Warning. It may explain a bit more.

Truth is a rare commodity. It is more precious than gold. You will hear some say, "I have to see it before I believe it." That saying became a way of life. Why? Because people have lied, cheated, and tricked others for centuries. So if we see it right before our eyes we will believe it. So why not have some situations happen right before our eyes? I mean, let's face the facts, if we see it, we will believe it.

This information of other life forms can't be dumped on us all at once. They must acquaint us a little bit at a time, so we don't freak out or die of shock or fear. I have an idea, let's go to the movies... or how about some radio theater? Let's not bring the public straight to the truth, but let their eyes see an imitation of the truth. All people (male and female) are visual. When people see something with their eyes, it has quite an effect on them. We'll call this... visual effects.

Visual effects have enhanced our belief of the imitation while watching the big screen for years. What you see on the screen is not what is really being filmed. Visual effects have become so advanced that you're not sure what you are really viewing. Is it reality or imitation? Visual effects play a major role in the movie business. If the producers and directors make you believe what you saw is real, then they have truly succeeded. In fact, if the producers and directors can make you believe that what you saw was partial reality, they have succeeded. The term, "keep you guessing", comes to mind. This in fact puts a spin of control on the public. Major media from news to films have controlled and manipulated the public for many years, guiding and directing their beliefs to a One World, unity driven agenda. The New World Order is such a big part of this alien/fallen angel agenda. Here is a quote from the Sauder Zone Website that explains a piece of the history of the formation of the New World Order.

... confiscate all two-way communications devices such as computers, telephones, fax machines, etc. (disabling freedom of speech – of assembly, free expression, etc.

"As World War II was drawing to a close and General George Patton was making his deadly push into the heart of Europe in pursuit of Nazi forces who were beginning to realize that their fascist empire was about to crumble –or so it seemed –a counter-measure was put into effect by deeplevel agents of the Nazi S.S. This bold and brazen plan was to effect not only an escape of the inner core of the Nazi S.S. but also to implement an infiltration of the United States' military-industrial establishment using Nazi S.S. 5th column agents in America who would be instructed to blendinwith the population and coordinate their corporate armies in preparation for a future attempt to take control of the American government from within!

So, how were the Nazi's able to infiltrate the heart of American Intelligence without giving themselves away? They would have to have received backing from a very powerful organization already operating within the confines of the American Republic. The only thing more powerful than the American government itself, the Nazis discovered, were the multi-billion-dollar corporate empires which had a considerable influence on the American political system behind-the-scenes. One of the most powerful of these financial empires had put Dwight D. Eisenhower into the presidency, as well as one of their own family members into the Vice Presidency. This financial empire was none other than the ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION. This foundation had a great deal of influence in the media and, in turn, in manipulating public opinion in favor of their own political agendas.

According to the well-known International economist Dr. Antony Sutton, the Rockefellers not only helped to finance the Nazi Empire –the Rockefellers being long-time members of Bavarian-German secret societies that were determined to rule the world by establishing a totalitarian 'New World Order' –but their STANDARD [EXXON] OIL company had literally provided the 'fuel' for the Nazi War machine's conquest of Europe.

Nelson Rockefeller (who was later manipulated into the Vice Presidency) initially brought 3000 crack Nazi S.S. agents into the United States and gave them new identities and positions within their Military-Industrial Establishment. This super-secret operation was called PROJECT PAPERCLIP. Also, several former Nazi scientists from the Peenemunde Aerodynamics Institute which built the 'V-1' and 'V-2' rockets which reigned terror upon England were placed in positions of influence within these corporate/military establishments as well.

The UNITED NATIONS ORGANIZATION [NOW] was initially created by the Bavarian secret orders (or the Bavarian Empire) and is ultimately being run from Bavaria, Germany – although they will never admit to this. Former U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim, an Austrian, has been accused by many of being an undercover Nazi war criminal. He was allegedly one of several Nazi infiltrators who helped form the 'unofficial'genocidal policies of the UNITED NATIONS ORGANIZATION.

The Genocidal and Population Control plans of the United Nations are not too difficult to document. The U.N. N.W.O. (UNITED NATIONS NEW WORLD ORDER) also plans to foment anarchy and race riots in America in preparation for the implementation of Executive Orders which will be used to establish martial law and the presence of a UNITED NATIONS "peace keeping force". They will use the excuse that since "we" have sent "peace keepers" to other countries, we in America are not exempt from U.N. intervention in a time of internal instability. However, these U.N. 'Blue Helmets', once they have established their presence, WILL NEVER LEAVE willingly. Instead they will be used to force Americans to conform to the fascist Bavarian "New World Order" via its "Trojan horse", which is known today as the UNITED NATIONS ORGANIZATION or U.N.O.

Now before you accuse me of suffering from paranoid delusions, I would CHALLENGE you to read this entire series of files, and THEN you can accuse me of paranoid schizophrenia if you wish...

When and if a "U.N. Police Action" is taken against America, the first order of business will be to confiscate all personal weapons (take away the right to bear arms – in fact the Gun Control Act of 1968 was lifted in its entirety from the Nazi Weapons Law of 1938, which was supposed to curb "gang activity" between Nazi and Communist Party thugs); outlaw all non-sanctioned religious activities (remove freedom of worship – or initiate an "inquisition" against all religions that are not approved by the "New World Order"); and confiscate all two-way communications devices such as computers, telephones, fax machines, etc. (disabling freedom of speech – of assembly, free expression, etc. You doubt that such Executive Orders for "Emergency" contingencies are on the books? Then read the concluding files in this series. Better yet, read all the files in order and you'll get a remarkable overview of what is taking place in this world. Remember, knowledge is power and power is protection. Wol.).

I don't believe the public is truly informed about just how influential the media really is.

These three foundational freedoms, as well as the rest of the BILL OF RIGHTS, will be eliminated if these enemies of freedom and justice have their way. 'Dissenters' will either be shot on site or will be taken to one of the 13 [or more] CONCENTRATION CAMP centers that have been prepared and ARE NOW operational with the United States. Eleven of these have been identified as follows:

Ft. Chaffee, Arkansas;
Ft. Drum, New York;
Ft. Indian Gap, Pennsylvania;
Camp A.P. Hill, Virginia;
Oakdale, California;
Eglin Air Force Bse, Florida;
Vandenberg AFB, California;
Ft. Mc Coy, Wisconsin;
Ft. Benning, Georgia;
Ft. Huachuca, Arizona;
Camp Krome, Florida."

There are many more than these thirteen camps that are listed here. It has been said that there are over 700 of these detention camps just in the United States alone.

Former President George Herbert Walker Bush called for a New World Order in 1992, which would bring all the countries and nations together in unity and "harmony". With that kind of "harmony", (notice I use this word repeatedly because this is one of the world's leaders favorite terms) you would only need One World leader or President. No more wars, no more battles... just unity and "harmony" with all people of the world. How sweet! Of course, truth has it that these world leaders are anything but sweet.

A New World Order has been planned since the turn of the century dating back to the early 1900's. Adolf Hitler, who coincidentally was funded by Grandpappy Prescott Bush, was the chosen candidate to bring the world under one "sweet and honest" leader. Somehow, killing and murdering 1.5 million Jews and thousands and thousands of Christians does not sound "sweet and honest". So let's cut to the chase. The selected One World unity-driven leader will not be sweet and honest, he will mirror Adolf Hitler and be a dictator, enslaving billions of people worldwide. What a plan! What a Grand Plan devised and birthed by someone of supreme intelligence. Let it be known that someone of a genius-like mind would be selected to be the next Adolf Hitler. This all makes sense... but yet... where would a scheme or plan like this originate from? Someone had to think this up. Someone spoke and put this nasty evil plan in the heads of powerful men who control and manipulate.

Who could it be? Could it be the same parallel of Genesis 3:4? ...

This book is a "smoking gun" to what is really going on underneath the surface! Why has our technology so rapidly increased in the past twenty years? Why are there so many deaths surrounding UFOlogy? If there are no UFO's why do the United States Presidents talk about them? Are the Nephilim really among us in this modern day? Is there anything we can do to prepare for what is coming? Find these answers and more in this shocking expose that will give you the spiritual reason why we have sold our souls for technology. This book may not be suitable for the close-minded, religious modern-day Saducee and Pharisee-minded people. Jesus said, "The truth shall set you free." "and the serpent said". Now, maybe you are starting to see the serpent is not a normal snake as we see in the zoo. Maybe he is more subtle than any beast in the garden. Maybe he is more subtle than any beast or human in the world. Maybe the serpent has a plan to coerce the world leaders into fulfilling his agenda. So here's the Big, Big Question has the serpent (alien) talked or communicated with the world leaders?

Remember the mass media I was talking about? They play a huge role in the marketing of the serpent. Now the serpent, or alien, could be quite scary if glanced upon. One would envision a reptile-like man with scales and a snake-like head, and beady black eyes. Coincidentally enough beings like this have reportedly been seen by UFO hunters in remote, rock-like dwellings or cave entrances. If someone changed the look of these serpents, to maybe the likeness of a man in a space suit, or something resembling an astronaut like the Apollo 11 mission; it could be easier for people to digest or accept. If you do your homework and start digging into data reaching back in time, you will come to the shocking truth that the serpent has been communicating with certain people for years and years.

The big picture here is that a lot of money is being spent to make you believe there are no UFO-alien type extra-terrestrials.

There is a diabolical plan that some people of this world are involved with, and we are not even aware of it. It is my belief that the serpent or alien has been communicating to world leaders, having them follow a master plan, so that all power will rest on the one chosen world leader. Now isn't that bizarre?!

The world leaders have put their heads together and come up with a Grand Plan to market the serpent and introduce him to the public. Please understand that I am not saying, nor implying, that our astronauts are space aliens. I am referring to the "Grand" marketing plan. People have to feel comfortable before they will be accepting. So, the plan is to comfort the people with visual effects. You guessed it, the mega-media industry full of money, power, control and deceit. Have you ever seen a super faith-based, sold out, bold Christian in the film, news or media industry? NO! And if there were any, they would be few. There is a unique hush in Hollywood about silently guiding the people to believe and sway with the world leaders' agenda. These Hollywood powers are famous, influential and revered by many. They are paid large sums of money to complete a plan, (of course), for the people to believe.

I don't believe the public is truly informed about just how influential the media really is. It started years ago with Orson Welles, and his radio program that shocked the world. In 1938, U.S. actor Orson Welles spoke in his Mercury Theater's radio production of H.G.Well's, "War of The Worlds". This realistic radio production made thousands upon thousands of people panic into thinking that space ships had landed in the United States and that we were at war with outer space. Listeners from everywhere were stricken with absolute fear. Orson would later publicly apologize for all the mishap, fear and confusion. This escapade would later haunt him in his career.

But one might want to dig a little deeper. Who again wrote "War of the Worlds"? British writer and social reformer H.G. Wells. Born 1866, Herbert George Wells wrote such popular science fiction books as; "The Time Machine" (1895), and "The War of The Worlds" (1898). H.G.Wells taught and studied science, while also founding the Fabian Society in 1910. By founding the Fabian Society, he became a social prophet using propaganda to change the world toward socialism. Socialism can very much lead to a dictatorship. And believe me, a dictatorship is a way to bring about a "New World Order". So could we think that Orson Welles, the talented, young aspiring actor was coaxed into a deceptive event that would mark a new time in history? Were world leaders using the media for their purposes of propaganda to bring about a New World Order?

Another funny coincidence is that this was at the exact time Adolf Hitler was at the height of his power. In 1938 people did not question news, government, or any other such agencies. Conspiracy was not an option at that time. In those days, most people did not question authority because trust was still a part of the American culture. I'm not saying it was a perfect America at that time, but there was more integrity in our government then, than now.

Is it politically correct of me to say that over sixty-eight years ago there was an elite group of world leaders trying to prepare the world for a "New World Order", and sitting in the seat of power would be the one world leader? Now that's power! Coincidentally enough, the summer of 2005 brought us Steven Spielberg and his new and improved "War of The Worlds". Again I would remind you that I don't believe in coincidences.

"War of The Worlds" will keep popping up because this is about what is getting ready to happen. The rumor in the UFO underground research world is that the United States government signed a treaty with the aliens/serpents. In exchange for technology, they would allow the aliens to abduct humans (while turning their heads the other direction) and cattle, as long as a list of adbuctees would be given to the National Security Council. Now this is not the view of the surface UFO research groups. I believe the truth here is that if you play with a snake, you're going to get bit. Unfortunately the aliens, better known as "EBE's", did not tell the truth about the abductees. They only submitted a partial list to the National Security Council. This probably has to do with the EBE's, or serpent/demon's master, whom we are told in the Bible is the father of lies. I will go into greater detail why the serpent/aliens want to abduct the people in the next Chapter.

Since there were thousands of people disappearing, this caused a small panic in our government. Something went wrong and they did not know quite how to handle it. This would also bring about the truth of children being abducted as well. The serpent/alien do not carry sympathy and compassion as humans do. In hell, there is no grace and there is no mercy. Grace and mercy birth compassion.

In movies years ago, producers and directors would never write in the script for children to be killed or murdered. The public just would not stand for it, and would reject the film. Thus the movie would flop at the box office. This policy is advancing and has changed. The world is being taught to be less and less compassionate. The question is: where is the world learning this new noncompassionate role from? There are who knows how many children being abducted every year without a trace. And of course we are led to believe that the abductions are carried out by wacko sexually perverted men seeking to rape and kill. Sex offenders have come into a national spotlight and are the sole focus of these abductions. Now I'm not advocating kidnappers or sex offenders, but it is possible they are getting a bad rap.

The big picture here is that a lot of money is being spent to make you believe there are no UFO-alien type extra-terrestrials. Yet this list of unidentified flying objects increases every year. There are many high levels of employees that work for the world leaders, whose only job is to confuse, or sabotage the truth so that people do not really know what to believe in. Satan is the master of confusion. So now you have an array of information and disinformation to sift through to find out what is real. All right then, I have an idea; let's just back up from this crazy kind of thinking, and review a few facts. Maybe it was not a planned terror when Orson Welles scared the world in 1938. And that crashed disc or space ship in Roswell, New Mexico, (you know, the one with four alien bodies found and eyewitnesses confirmed the sighting), maybe that was a huge staged play. Let's forget about the government cover-ups again, and again, and again. And so what if the government is threatening people's lives if they talk or discuss the real truth of what they see, or go through in an abduction? I'm sure the movies during the past sixty-five years dealing with space ships, aliens, close encounters, crop circles, men in black (the joke) and always ending with the "War of The Worlds", is probably just the ufoo-grab-the-goo-and-run-fun. But I propose this huge fact that you may have overlooked. In Genesis 3 did God destroy the serpent, (kill, dead, wipe out, annihilate) or did He curse him? If the evil serpent who uses mental (telepathic) powers of evil is not dead...where is he?

Well hello there, Ma'am. My planet is selling cookies to help finance the invasion of your planet. Only $3 per box.

As time goes on I'm sure that my writing skills might become a bit more polished. I must admit, I never said that I was a New York Times Best Selling author. I am a man with a warning. Thousands and thousands have read my book and only few have disagreed. And I am one to believe that "Bad press" is "Good press". When I have been a guest on other radio programs, from Clear Channel to T.V., they always say the same thing: "Ronnie, you are passionate about this message." And after our conversation I can see fear in those who begin to understand. What if this warning is correct? Then what? I am sure that reading positive thought provoking literature could be a bit more encouraging, but here's some food for thought:

TO ALL THE DEAD TSUNAMI VICTIMS OF INDONESIA, WOULD YOU HAVE LIKED AN ADVANCED WARNING BEFORE THE DESTRUCTION?

Think about it.

Ronnie McMullen, author of Sold Out Warning has been asked to come to the Roswell UFO festival this year. It is the 61st anniversary of Roswell and Ronnie believes it is a wonderful opportunity to share his truths about the ancient subject about aliens. It will be held on July 3,4,5,and 6th at the Roswell, New Mexico museum.

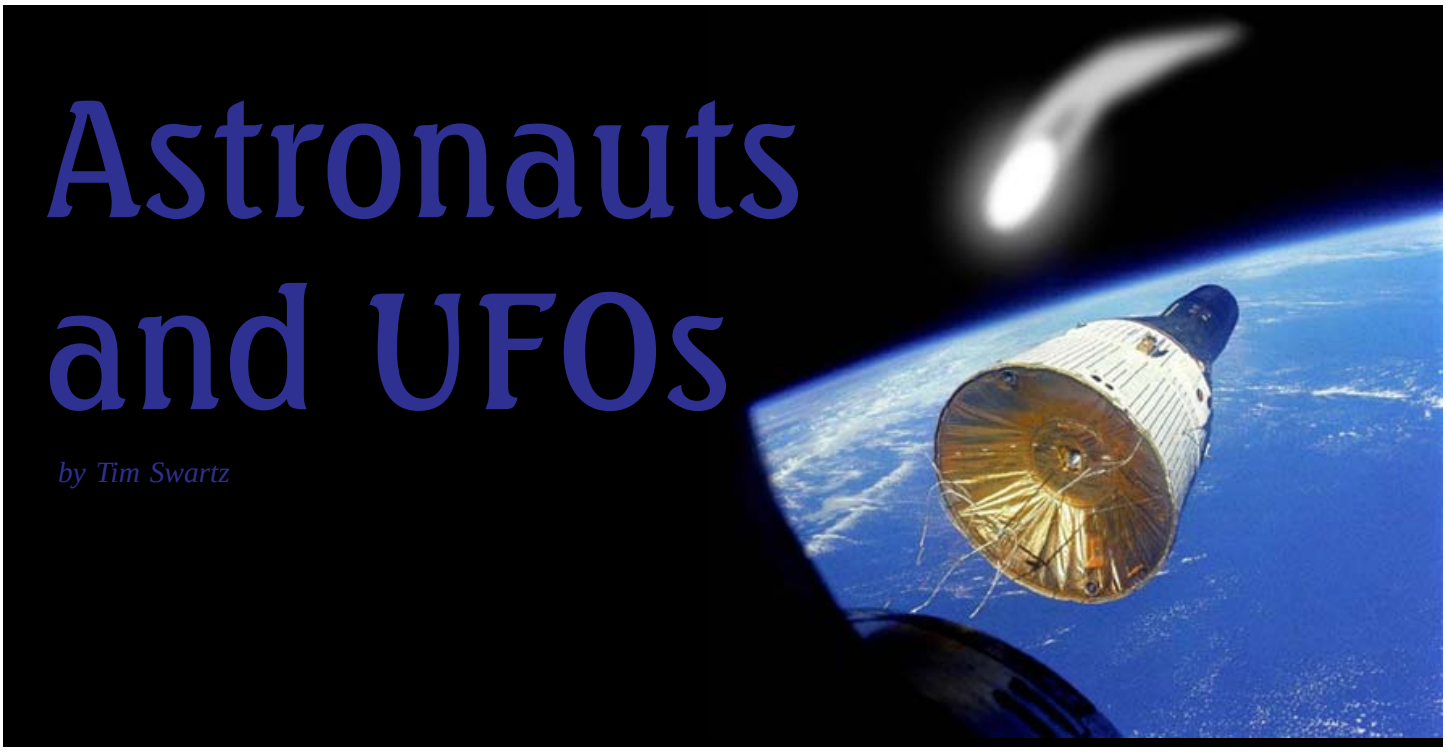
Astronauts and UFOs

by Tim Swartz



Who actually sees UFOs? Unexplained aerial phenomena have been reported over the years by many intelligent and credible people. Police, scientists, astronomers, military personnel, pilots, and even astronauts, have all reported sighting UFOs. Nevertheless, skeptics of UFO sightings frequently state that no "credible" witnesses ever see them. The implication is that UFOs are seen only by those who lack formal education and cannot tell the difference between a bird and something genuinely unknown. Try telling this to some of our most respected hero's of the modern era, those who dared to take the first, dangerous, steps into the heavens, and came face to face with the unknown.

It may be a surprise to many that astronauts would ever admit to seeing things that appear out of the ordinary. On Earth, those who dare report sighting a UFO are branded drunk, crackpots or mentally unstable. Yet, many highly trained and disciplined astronauts, both American and Russian, have publicly acknowledged that they too have seen UFOs while in space.

This incredible information has been publicized, but largely ignored by the rest of the world. As well, the astronauts themselves have been reluctant to openly speak out about their sightings; that is until they retired from the space program. After that, some have honestly admitted their strange experiences.

BEYOND THE ATMOSPHERE

From the very beginning of manned flight into space, astronauts encountered things that were not covered in their basic training. During the first American orbital flight on February 20, 1962, astronaut John Glenn, piloting his Mercury capsule, saw three objects follow and then overtake him at varying speeds. Glenn also observed what he called glowing "snowflakes" or "fireflies" that swirled around his capsule. Later flights also observed them and NASA officials surmised that the fireflies were actually bits of ice that had become detached from the sides of the capsule.

Three years later, on June 4, 1965, astronaut James McDivitt on Gemini 4 sighted a cylindrical-shaped object with an antenna-like extension. McDivitt said the object was white or silvery in appearance as seen against the day sky, and was approximately ten-miles from the Gemini.

"All of a sudden there was this white object out there," McDivitt said. "It looked like a beer can with a pencil sticking out of it at an angle. It had a definite cylinder shape, about three times as long as its diameter."

The reaction of the astronaut was that it might be necessary to take action to avoid a collision since the UFO appeared to be closing in on Gemini. McDivitt did manage to take a photograph as well as shoot some film of the object before it was lost in the bright sunlight.

After splashdown, the film was sent from the carrier to be processed and was not seen again by McDivitt for four days. When the NASA photo interpreter released three or four pictures of the UFO McDivitt stated that the quality of the photo was so bad that it failed to reproduce what he had seen.

NORAD made an investigation of possible satellites and came up with the suggestion that the object might have been a satellite called Pegasus which was 1200 miles away at the time. McDivitt questions this identification due to the fact that the object he sighted appeared to be much closer to Gemini than Pegasus. However, McDivitt is confident that what he saw was a manmade object, possibly a classified reconnisence satellite, which naturally NORAD could not disclose.

Later that same year during December's Gemini 7 flight, astronauts Jim Lovell and Frank Borman radioed Mission Control that they had a "bogey" in sight:

Spacecraft: Bogey at 10 o'clock high.
Capcom: This is Houston. Say again 7.
Spacecraft: Said we have a bogey at 10 o'clock high.
Capcom: Roger. Gemini 7, is that the booster or is that an actual sighting?
Spacecraft: We have several, looks like debris up here. Actual sighting.
Capcom: You have any more information? Estimate distance or size?
Spacecraft: We also have the booster in sight.
Capcom: Understand you also have the booster in sight, Roger.
Spacecraft: Yeah, we have a very, very many — look like hundreds of little particles banked on the left out about three to seven miles.
Capcom: Understand you have many small particles going by on the left. At what distance?
Spacecraft: Oh about — it looks like a path of the vehicle at 90 degrees.
Capcom: Roger, understand that they are about three to four miles away.
Spacecraft: They are passed now they are in polar orbit.
Capcom: Were these particles in addition to the booster and the bogey at 10 o'clock high?

Spacecraft: Roger — Spacecraft (Lovell) I have the booster on my side, it's a brilliant body in the sun, against a black background with trillions of particles on it.

The general reconstruction of the sighting is that in addition to the booster, which was the separated lower stage of the rocket that took them into orbit, traveling in an orbit similar to that of the spacecraft there was another bright object (bogey) together with many illuminated particles. It has been suggested that the bogey and particles were fragments from the launching of Gemini 7, but this is impossible if they were traveling in a polar orbit, a different orbit from Gemini 7.

In 1966, during Gemini 10, two bright red glowing objects captured the attention of astronauts John Young and Michael Collins as they circled the Earth. At the time they had ventured further into space than any other human, suddenly both astronauts were amazed to see that two bright red glowing objects now occupied the same orbital path as the Gemini. The astronauts immediately informed Mission Control, who in turn requested further information. In their words: "If you can get a bearing maybe we can track them down." However, at that particular moment astronaut Young radioed back: "They just disappeared..."

The official verdict attributed the sighting to space junk discarded from an unmanned Saturn rocket earlier that month. The astronauts were adamant these were not stars and it is difficult to image what man-made device of that time could maneuver in the erratic way the objects did as they suddenly left orbit and quickly disappeared.

Author Frank Edwards claimed that NASA deliberately pulled the plug on the voice link to the astronauts to avoid creating a sensation. In his book Flying Saucers - Here and Now, he makes the following allegation: "Friends of mine who were present at the Space Center during this incident tell me that the voice of astronaut Young was cut off the intercom for more than a minute as he began describing what he was watching. By the time he came back on the intercom he seemed to have been briefed, for that was when he "guessed" that he had only been seeing some satellite!"

Edwards maintains that as cameras became more prevalent aboard space flights, Mission Control initiated a five-second tape delay before releasing the pictures back to the networks. Ostensibly this was in the interests of "good taste." Comments Edwards: "NASA seemed to be afraid that these foul talking astronauts might say a bad word...something like UFO perhaps?"

SANTA CLAUS

Because of the unwanted media attention generated by the Gemini UFO reports, NASA instructed its astronauts to never use words such as "bogey" or "UFO" if they sighted something unidentified. Instead, the astronauts were to use the code word "Santa Claus" when informing Mission Control of unusual activity around their capsules.

This edict came just in time for the Apollo missions to the moon where unconfirmed reports say that both Neil Armstrong and Edwin Aldrin saw UFOs shortly after their historic landing on the moon in July, 1969. According to former NASA employee Otto Binder, unnamed radio hams with their own VHF receiving radios that bypassed NASA's broadcasting outlets picked up this exchange:

> Mission Control: What's there? Mission Control calling Apollo 11.
> Apollo 11: These babies are huge sir...enormous...oh, God, you wouldn't believe it! I'm telling you there are other spacecraft out there...lined up on the far side of the crater edge...they're on the moon watching us.

These stories were repeated in popular UFO magazines, but there was no verification that the incident had actually occurred; however, in 1979, Maurice Chatelain, who was the senior engineer for NASA contractor North American Aviation, confirmed that Armstrong had indeed reported seeing two UFOs on the rim of a crater.

"The encounter was common knowledge in NASA, but nobody has talked about it until now. In fact, all Apollo and Gemini flights were followed, both at a distance and sometimes also quite closely, by space vehicles of unknown origin - flying saucers, or UFOs, if you want to call them by that name. Every time it occurred, the astronauts informed Mission Control, who then ordered absolute silence."

FORMER ASTRONAUT ALLEGES UFO COVER-UP

The late astronaut Leroy Gordon "Gordo" Cooper Jr. said in 2000 that the government has "swept under the rug" the truth about unidentified flying objects.

"Each administration has probably tried to figure out how, with the least embarrassment, they could confess to this whole thing, he said. "They need to clean the slate about what has been going on or has not been going on."

Cooper felt that there had been very qualified people and qualified groups of people that have had interface of one type or another with extraterrestrial craft or beings. "To really deny that something is going on and deny that they definitely exist…we need a little more explanation."

One reason why Cooper was so insistent that UFOs are real was his own personal sightings in the 1950's while assigned to a jet fighter group in Germany. While stationed there, he remembers very vividly a week in 1952 that formations of circular objects passed over the Air Base on an almost daily routine.

"While flying with several other USAF pilots that week in 1957, we sighted numerous radiant flying discs above us." Cooper said. "We couldn't tell how high they were and we couldn't get anywhere near their altitude to pin them down, but they were round in shape and very metallic looking."

UFOs were to continue to haunt Cooper when the Air Force Colonel was transferred several years later to Edwards Air Force Base Flight Test Center in the California desert. In 1957, he was one of an elite band of test pilots in charge of several advanced projects, including the installation of a precision landing system.

"I had a camera crew filming the installation when they spotted a saucer. They filmed it as it flew overhead, then hovered, extended three legs as landing gear, and slowly came down to land on a dry lake bed."

Cooper remembers that the camera crew managed to get within 20 or 30 yards of the landed disc, filming all the time. It was a classic saucer, shiny silver and smooth, about 30 feet across. As they approached closer it took off and quickly disappeared into the clear desert sky.

When his camera crew handed over the film, Cooper followed standard procedure and contacted Washington to report the UFO, and "all heck broke loose," he said.

"After a while a high-ranking officer said when the film was developed I was to put it in a pouch and send it to Washington," said Cooper. "He didn't say anything about me not looking at the film. That's what I did when it came back from the lab - and it was all there just like the camera crew reported."

After he reviewed the film at least a dozen times, the footage was quickly forwarded to Washington. Cooper no doubt expected to get a reply in a few weeks' time as to what his men had seen and photographed, but there was no word, and the movie "vanished," never to surface again. When the Air Force later started Operation Blue Book to collate UFO evidence and reports, Cooper says he mentioned the film evidence, but the film was supposedly never found.

The rumors persist that American astronauts and Russian cosmonauts continue to see UFOs while in space. NASA may be a civilian agency, but many of its programs are funded by the defense budget and most of the astronauts are subject to military security regulations. Because of this, astronauts are forbidden to publicly speak about their sightings.

It must be remembered that even though the astronauts were seeing unidentified objects in space, there is no evidence that these UFOs were extraterrestrial spaceships hovering around keeping an eye on us. UFO means unidentified flying object and until we can say for certain otherwise, that is what we should think of them as.

Hopefully, as time goes by and more astronauts retire, they will feel fewer restrictions and will openly discuss their UFO encounters. Then we can get a better idea of the kinds of strange mysteries that await us in the deep, dark reaches of outer space.

Resistance Is Futile! You Will Be Assimilated!

Human Enhancement and Microchip Technology Opens Door For Cyborgs & Antichrist Marking System

By Thomas Horn
RNU News Sr. Reporter

According to the BBC, the Australian-based Tissue Culture and Art (TCA) project is growing a third ear from the skin and cartilage of Stelarc, a performer who plans to implant it on his arm with a sound chip and a proximity sensor so that the ear can speak to anyone who gets close to it.

"The artist also has plans to couple it with a modem and a wearable computer so that it doubles as an internet antenna, able to broadcast RealAudio sounds to supplement the local sounds that the actual ears hear, thus scaling up the body's senses," the report says.

Stelarc told BBC News Online that "The body off the Earth can't cope with the extremes of environments, gravitational pressures, etc. and requires technological life-support systems to function in these new spaces. The body can only be considered relevant now as a component of extended operational systems."

FUTURE BEINGS

Fans of the television series Star Trek will equate such biological tinkering with The Borg ("Cyborg"), the greatest villains ever introduced to television audiences. The biological and technological terrors made their debut on May 8th, 1989 in the "Q, Who?" episode of The Next Generation.

"This is the Borg Collective," they said menacingly. "Prepare to be assimilated. We will add your biological and technological distinctive to our own. You will adapt to service us. Resistance is futile."

Viewers sat on edge as the cybernetically enhanced and immensely powerful humanoids overcame the USS Enterprise and her crew. Implanted with biometric devices connected to a sophisticated communications network known as "The Borg Collective," the superior beings moved without conscious to assimilate the Star Trek crew and to implant them with biometric devices designed to facilitate the needs of The Collective.

When the crew of the Enterprise finally escaped during the two-part cliffhanger, Trekkies around the world exhaled a borg-like collective sigh of relief.

"I AM LOCUTUS OF BORG!"

At one point during The Next Generation series, captain Jean-Luc Picard was captured again and assimilated by the Borg. He became known as Locutus of Borg and promised to "raise the quality of life for all species." This would be accomplished by forced integration into the Collective.

Lately another technology company has illustrated how life in the not-to-distant future may imitate the filmmakers art. Applied Digital Solutions (ADS) has signed international agreements to distribute its Borg-like technology named Digital Angel (TM), a miniature digital transceiver designed for human implantation.

According to ADS, "The implantable transceiver sends and receives data and can be continuously tracked by GPS (Global Positioning Satellite technologies. The transceiver's power supply and actuation system are unlike anything ever created. When implanted within a body, the device is powered electromechanically through the movement of muscles and can be activated either by the 'wearer' or by the monitoring facility."

In a company press release ADS stated that "Digital Angel has generated a large and positive response from both the investing public and those who are interested in participating in the wide array of applications for this technology."

ADS also claims that Digital Angel has "a variety of potential uses, such as providing a tamper-proof means of identification for enhanced e-business security, animal tracking, locating lost or missing individuals, tracking the location of valuable property and monitoring the medical conditions of at-risk patients."

Digital Angel (http://www.digitalangel.net) is the latest in emerging technologies designed to "enhance" the human species. Research teams funded by the National Institutes of Health, NASA, and a barrage of privately funded laboratories are also developing brain implants that will make it possible for people to communicate through computers using the power of thought. This could ultimately facilitate a wide array of complicated tasks assigned by the New Collective.

If this all sounds a bit Orwellian—it is. It is also reality, and many Christians believe such technology points to an antichrist system that will ultimately assimilate ethnic groups, ideologies, religions, and economics from around the world into a New World Order "Collective."

Control of the NWOs "assimilated" will be derived at the expense of individual human liberties. Everyone, "both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond [will be forced to] receive a mark [charagma; from Greek charax meaning to stake down into or "stick into" such as with a hypodermic needle injecting something under the skin!] in their right hand, or in their foreheads: And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six (Rev. 13:16-18-emphasis added)

According to experts, experiments in behavior modification have also been conducted using implanted chips and may explain the ruthless methods of assimilation that will be employed by the borg-like followers of the Antichrist. (See Rev. 13:15; 20:4)

BE ASSIMILATED, OR BE STEREOTYPED AND DESTROYED!

One cannot read the books of Revelation and Daniel without observing the unique combination of political (Antichrist) and religious (False Prophet) personalities operating within the antichrist's "collective." How will religious leaders and laypeople be convinced to follow anti-Christian anti-democracy? Enter a pattern reminiscent of Jewish persecution in post war Germany: Isolation of and discrimination against conservatives who fear the loss of individual human liberties. The need to trivialize those who appreciate individual freedoms is necessary, leading to mandatory assimilation.

In Russia, where national tax ID numbers are being introduced, Andrei Zolotov Jr. wrote in The Moscow Times: "...some right-wing Christians fear the growing computerization of the world is opening the way for the coming of the Antichrist. The government's new, widely publicized plan to give every citizen a tax identification number and talk of introducing social security cards with bar codes - dreaded by those who see Satan's number, 666, in the codes - has apparently given them cause for further alarm."

The Holy Synod of the Russian Orthodox Church addressed the Governments plans, saying, "Many Christians, who consider the name given to them in baptism holy, consider it unworthy to ask the government for some new 'name' in the form of a number."

But Sergei Chapnin, editor of the Russian magazine Sobornost Orthodox (www.sobor.ru), said the religious community's response is a sign that an "occult" mentality is penetrating the Orthodox Church.

"To believe in the magic of numbers is absolutely a non-Christian attitude toward life," Chapnin said. "If some people are afraid of it, it only says that occultism is intruding into Christian consciousness, and first of all the consciousness of neophytes who are the majority in today's Russian Orthodox Church."

How convenient.

LOCUTUS OF BORG:
"We will raise the quality of life for all species."

Work on microchip technology as a method of raising the quality of life through medical advancements is being conducted at laboratories like The Fetal Treatment Center (FTC) at UC San Francisco where scientists have already successfully connected (NASA's) implantable biotelemetry devices to unborn babies.

Other specialists, such as Dr Roy Bakay of Emory University in Atlanta, Georgia are installing chip-to-brain implants.

Charles Ostman, a senior fellow at the Institute for Global Futures says, "Neuroprosthetics are . . . inevitable. Biochip implants may become part of a rote medical procedure. After that, interface with outside systems is a logical next step."

Professor Kevin Warwick, the first known recipient of a biometric chip implant, speaks excitedly of microchip implantation. "Right-o, got the signal, got the implant; all I've got to do is run a wire from the implant to my nervous system. I'm so excited about it, I want to get on with the next step straight away. Let's see if we can control computers directly from our nervous system."

When asked about the Borg-like ramifications of such technology, professor Warwick responds "It is possible for machines to become more intelligent than humans in the reasonably near future. Machines will then become the dominant life form on earth."

Spoken like a good little Borg wannabe.

"And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb. And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name" (Rev. 14:9-11).

Disturbing Secrets:

Bill English and Project Blue Book Report 13

By Bill Knell

After many phone conversations with Bill English during the late 1980s and early 1990s, I came to the conclusion that he was the real deal. That's a rare find in a field filled with people that imagine themselves to be former Directors of MJ-12, Alien Saviors and Pleadian Royalty. Apart from his attention to detail and willingness to produce credentials, Bill had much more to lose than gain by coming forward with the story of Blue Book Report 13. Considering the controversies that grew out of the MJ-12 documents, who would want that kind of negative attention?

Project Bluebook (1949-1969) was the official U.S. Government investigation into UFOs that replaced Projects Grudge (1949-1951) and Sign (1947-1949). Headquartered at Wright-Patterson AFB, the investigations were handled by the U.S. Air Force. Without going into a lot of detail that would distract from the subject, there were thirteen reports prepared from the raw information gathered by those investigations. The reports were numbered 1-12 and 14.

Report 14 contradicted conclusions reached by the others. 1-12 left wiggle room for attacking the credibility of UFO Witnesses. 14 pointed out that less than 10% of the UFO sightings or encounters reported to Bluebook could be attributed to unstable or unreliable witnesses. That made everyone wonder if there was a Report 13 and what it had to say. If there was and it was filled with secrets, why skip a number? Why not give it a different designation and lock it away in some forgotten file drawer? The answer to those questions has to do with the military and bureaucratic mindset. They would rather spend millions of dollars trying to deny or discredit a Report 13, instead of just changing the number.

Enter Bill English, the son of an Arizona State Legislator and a former Captain in the U.S. Army Green Berets. Bill was honorably discharged while overseas in 1973. He remained in Germany with his wife until she was transferred to RAF Chicksands' Department of Defense Schools. Bill's wife was a GS-9 (Teacher). After the couple arrived at Chicksands, English says he ran into a former Commanding Officer working for the NSA. He offered Bill a job at a listening post known as the 'elephant cage.' English accepted the position and remained there until July of 1976.

Bill describes his duties at the listening post:

"It was my job to analyze the translated transcripts of radio transmissions that had been received from Soviet bloc nations through the listening post at Chicksands. We monitored military frequencies mostly. I had to assign what we called a probability rating to the material and create a possible scenario that might result from the transmission or might have resulted in the transmission. Say, for example, if we received information that so-and-so was on vacation somewhere, and then we heard a phone call made from a certain location, we'd compare the two and get an indication whether or not this gentleman really was on vacation or not."

This mutilated body of a man was found near the Guarapiranga Reservoir in Brazil on 29th. September 1988

Near the end of June, 1976, English received a 625 page report to examine and evaluate. He identifies it as Grudge/Blue Book Report 13. After examining everything, Bill leaves us with the impression that he assigned a high probability rating to the report which indicated that UFOs were of extraterrestrial origin. He says that decision was influenced by the inclusion of photos associated with a classified military mission that occurred around May of 1970. That mission involved English.

Bill English was a member of Special Forces serving in Vietnam when his team was dispatched to a B-52 crash site in Laos. On arrival, he found the aircraft intact with little visible damage and hatches sealed. After blasting their way in, the team found the crew dead. They were still in their seats and harnesses, but 'horribly mutilated.' Despite the damage to their bodies, there was very little blood present on the floor of the aircraft. After photographing the scene and collecting items on their retrieval list, the Special Forces team set off charges causing bombs still on board the aircraft to explode and incinerate the bodies inside.

Apart from the inclusion of photos taken by the Special Forces Team in Laos, the report contained some very upsetting and disturbing information. The human mutilation case of Sergeant Lovette is a good example. In March of 1956, Air Force Sergeant Jonathan P. Lovette was with Major William Cunningham of the United States Air Force Missile Command. The two were at White Sands Missile Range looking for debris from a missile test. Sergeant Lovette was separated from Major Cunningham for a brief period of time when Cunningham heard him scream.

Cunningham ran over a dune and saw Lovette being dragged aboard a disc-shaped object by a snake-like device wrapped around his legs. Cunningham ran back to his vehicle and radioed news of the incident to Mission Control. Search parties were dispatched to find Lovette. After Cunningham was debriefed, he was admitted to the White Sands Base Dispensary for observation. Three days into the search, Lovette's nude body was located ten miles downrange.

English later commented on the condition of Lovette's body on audio cassette (abridged):

"The body had been mutilated; the tongue had been removed from the lower portion of the jaw. An incision had been made just under the tip of the chin and extended all the way back to the esophagus and larynx. He had been emasculated and his eyes had been removed… (Censored for disturbing content)… There was no sign of blood within the system. The initial autopsy report confirmed that the system had been completely drained of blood and that there was no vascular collapse due to death by bleeding… When the body was found there were a number of dead predatory type birds within the area who apparently had died after trying to partake of the sergeant's body."

Less than a month after he first received the Grudge/Blue Book Report 13, English reported to work only to find himself being escorted to the Base Commander's Office by security personnel. Colonel Robert Black informed him that his services were no longer needed and that he was being immediately expelled from the UK. English was placed on an aircraft at RAF Lakenheath and flown back to the USA without the opportunity to contact his wife or anyone else. Once home, he was given a plane ticket back to Arizona. Bill's wife was left with the impression that he had simply abandoned her.

Two years later, Colonel Black and his Operations Sergeant appeared at Bill's place of business in Tucson, AZ. Black told English that they had also been given the boot by the military because of Grudge/Blue Book Report 13 and that he had a plan to get even with them. Black claimed to have information about an enormous alien craft that was buried at the White Sands Missile Range in New Mexico. He wanted English to help him and his former Operations Sergeant find it and expose the Government Cover-Up. Bill agreed to help, sold his business and threw his money in with theirs.

English describes what happened during the hunt for the huge flying saucer:

"We purchased a van, which we outfitted with desert tires, marine radar, listening devices, magnetometers and some pretty flaky video cameras of the time. We rendezvoused and traveled along the perimeter of WSMR, and in certain areas we would cross into the test range and look around. Ultimately we wound up in White Sands National Park. From there we drove onto the range. Toward sunset, I was walking on the range about 1,000 yards in front of the vehicle. Black and his sergeant were both in it at the time. I heard a rather familiar sound, and screamed 'Incoming!' and went face first into the dirt. The next thing I know, the van is blowing up. I think they fired a rocket. Then there are helicopters all over the place, and I am running for my life, literally. I made it back to Tucson on foot."

After a series of quickly calculated steps and help from friends, English went into hiding. By the time he contacted me in the late 1980s, there had been several serious attempts on his life. To his credit, English began telling his story to most any serious UFO Researcher that would listen. This got his name out before the public and made the possibility of any additional assassination attempts unlikely. However, English still had one extremely dangerous adversary…himself.

Bill English was cautious when it came to revealing certain facts, but those instances were too few and far between. He

Bill Knell's Comprehensive DVD about the Philadelphia Experiment and the Montauk Project, including lengthy interviews with the Survivors

Join Bill for a comprehensive investigation of the Philadelphia Experiment, further experiments with time travel and invisibility (invisible aircraft), a chronicle of the Government cover-up of UFO events and an actual tour of the Montauk Base on his latest documentary dvd, SECRETS KEPT came across to me as a guy that was recounting his experiences from memory without concern for what anyone thought about it. Most criticisms of English or claimed contradictions count on the 'official version' from government sources and tend to be cancelled out by an equal amount of verifications. In the end, it's what Bill English read about in Grudge/Blue Book Report 13 that tips the scales in his favor.

Apart from any revelations by Bill English, it just made sense that a classified version of the Project Blue Book Report would exist in one form or another. After all, intelligence data is only as good as someone's ability to interpret it. Some sort of reference material would have to be available for that purpose. In such a case, no points would be given for political correctness or watered-down information. While some of the assertions made by English and included in the report may be disturbing, they are the kind of 'in your face' facts that would be found in a classified reference work. They are also not exclusive. Stories of this type exist within the files of many UFO investigators.

I recall being castigated by the UFO research community in New York during the 1980s after revealing that a number of already deceased bodies in local morgues and funeral homes were being strangely mutilated in parts of New York City and Westchester County.

I recall being castigated by the UFO research community in New York during the 1980s after revealing that a number of already deceased bodies in local morgues and funeral homes were being strangely mutilated in parts of New York City and Westchester County. The incidents were too widespread and numerous to be the work of a few twisted individuals or some local cult and coincided with multiple UFO sightings. While looking into that, I discovered that a larger than usual number of missing children cases were popping up in the same areas in conjunction with UFO Sightings. That coincides with another case mentioned in Grudge/Blue Book Report 13.

English recounts the Darlington Farm Case as mentioned in Report 13 on audio cassette (abridged):

"October 1953. Man, wife and 13 year old son were sitting down at dinner table. As they sat there the lights in the farm house began to dim. Dogs and animals raised ruckus on outside. 13 year old boy got up from dinner table to see what was going on. Called his mother and father to come look at the funny light in the sky. Father and mother went out onto the porch. When they got out on the porch one of the dogs broke loose from leash beside house and came running around front. Boy began chasing it into the open field."

"As the mother and father watched the light come down from the sky, they described it as a round ball of fire and it began to hover over the field where the boy and dog had run to. As they stood and watched, the mother and father heard the boy start screaming for help whereupon the father grabbed his shotgun which was right next to the door and began to run out into the field with the mother following. When the father got to the field he saw his son being carried away by what looked like little men, into this huge fiery looking object. As it took off the father fired several rounds at the object, to no avail. They found the dog; its head had been crushed but no sign of the boy or any other footprints of the little men who apparently carried him off."

"Father called the Darlington police and they immediately came out to investigate. The official report read that the boy had run off and was lost in the forest which bordered the farm. Within 48 hours the Air Force made the determination that the family was to be relocated. The mother and father were picked up by Air Force (personnel) and all personal belongings and possessions were loaded into U.S. Air Force trucks and moved to a northwestern relocation site. The mother was in shock and had to go through a great deal of psychotherapy and deprogramming as did father. One interesting aspect about this case was classification under Air Force report which read it was a genuine CE 3 and that for the good of national security the mother and father had been relocated to relocation zones Z21-14. Not sure whether this indicated map grid coordinates or latitude longitude."

The one thing that most critics and skeptics miss when they randomly attack UFO Witnesses and Cases is the commonality factor. That factor plays a big part in my belief that Grudge/Blue Book Report 13 is real and that English had access to it. The experiences and revelations of Bill English are disturbing on many levels, but that doesn't make them untrue. The truth remains the truth whether we are intellectually able to accept it or not.

More Lights in the Phoenix Skies

Two Updates

by the UFO Guy

UFO Alert: The Lights and Military Jets Are Back Over Phoenix

Less than a week after strange lights appeared in the skies over Northern Indiana and off the Jersey Coast, lights have returned to the skies over Phoenix. The lights were seen on Monday might (April 21, 2008) and are similar to the infamous display of bright objects in the night sky seen in March of 1997 over Phoenix, Arizona. Originally dubbed 'The Phoenix Lights' after they first appeared ten years ago, the lights have made several appearances since that time.

According to witnesses (which included a Reporter for the Arizona Republic newspaper), the Monday night light display seen over Deer Valley and other locations featured red lights. The bright objects morphed into various shapes and sizes, eventually forming a triangular and square shape. At least three U.S. Military jets chased the lights as they moved west to east in the sky. Officials from Deer Valley Airport officials said that none of their aircraft were responsible for the lights.

Witnesses, Pyrotechnicians and Readers Weigh In On the 2008 Phoenix Lights

Lights seen over Phoenix, Arizona, on April 21, 2008, have ignited controversy and reminded us of the famous March 13, 1997 sightings of lights and a huge triangular craft over the city. As with the original Phoenix Lights sightings of 1997, we have statements from the military that conflict with what witnesses have reported and witnesses that say what they saw doesn't match what's been reported by the news media.

By Tuesday morning, April 22, 2008, the military weighed in on the situation by saying they had no idea what the lights were and that no aircraft from Luke Air Force Base were in the air on the night in question. That claim was immediately contested by witnesses living close to Luke that heard jets taking off and landing on Monday evening. Others say that the jets were circling the objects or keeping an eye on them.

Things got even stranger by Tuesday afternoon as Air Traffic Controllers at Sky Harbor Airport said they say the lights, but the FAA would allow them to comment on what they saw. The FAA also refused to investigate the lights, despite a policy stating that they would investigate anything strange seen in the skies that could not be immediately identified. Add to this the story from a local resident who said that he saw his neighbor sent up some helium balloons with flares attached from his backyard right around the same time that the lights began to appear.

Comparable events took place over the skies of Stephenville and Dublin, Texas, back in January and have become known as 'The Stephenville Lights'. According to multiple witnesses, U.S. Military jets chased at least one large object during that occurrence. The jets may have continued to show up in Erath County, Texas, along with military helicopters, to investigate the reappearance of lights and other types of UFOs during the day and night since that time. Military aircraft have also buzzed the home of one or more UFO witnesses living in that area.

Lights similar to those seen over Phoenix also appeared on Tuesday and Wednesday (April 14-15, 2008) over the towns of Kokomo and Logansport in Northern Indiana. Those lights were accompanied by loud sounds, an odd metallic odor in the air, the appearance of military aircraft and debris falling from the sky. Earlier in the evening on Wednesday night (April 15, 2008), a fishing boat captain reported seeing a huge object split into smaller lights off the coast of Atlantic City, New Jersey and said that he felt a brief tremor after that event.

In the case of the original Phoenix Lights, the Stephenville Lights, the lights in Northern Indiana and those seen off the Jersey Coast, the U.S. Armed Forces claimed that they were just military exercises mistakenly reported as UFO sightings. However, a spokesperson for Luke Air Force Base said that they had no aircraft in the sky and that the lights seen over Phoenix on Monday night were not a part of any Air Force activities.

While it's doubtful that any known military or civilian aircraft were responsible for the appearance of the latest lights over Phoenix and Luke AFB has admitted as much, witnesses say that military jets were present during the event and chased the lights across the night sky. That is in direct conflict with the Luke AFB spokesperson's claim that none of their jets were in the sky on Monday night. However, it's a nice change to find the military not immediately trying to explain any and all UFO sightings away as training or other military aircraft events.

When the military does try and explain the lights away as jets involved in training exercises, it's obvious that all the recent sightings of these objects cannot be dismissed merely as military aircraft sightings by untrained observers. This is especially true in busy air corridors like Northern Indiana and the skies over the coast of New Jersey. These are areas were many commercial and private aircraft are constantly in the air heading to various major airports in those regions. It would have been beyond irresponsible for the military to fail to announce such exercises in advance.

Beyond the safety factor, it would also be ridiculous for military authorities to fail to announce any plans for exercises occurring late at night given the possibility that such events might cause a certain level of public panic and end up being reported as UFOs. Despite these facts, they keep on sending up jets to chase these objects, claim there are no objects other than military aircraft in the sky and always seem to fall back on the same old explanation; one which is becoming increasingly, obviously and laughingly unrealistic.

SAUCERS&ALIENS

The press loved the helium balloons and flares story almost as much as they did when the 'military flares' explanation was used to explain the original Phoenix Lights seen in 1997. However, the objects seen on April 21, 2008 were anything but military flares. Furthermore, the idea that one person could manage to set up and launch something bright enough to be the lights people saw and videotaped that night confounds the experts and witnesses.

After I wrote two previous articles about the reappearance of the Phoenix Lights, a number of people contacted me to weigh in on the situation. Most seemed satisfied with the balloons and flares explanation, but the actual witnesses were not and have problems with that theory. One witness said that the lights were far too consistently bright to be flares. Another said the lights hovered directly over his head, but didn't drift as if they were connected to balloons. Others saw the red lights from quite a distance and said they doubted the flares story because they had seen the military dropping flares and the lights looked nothing like that.

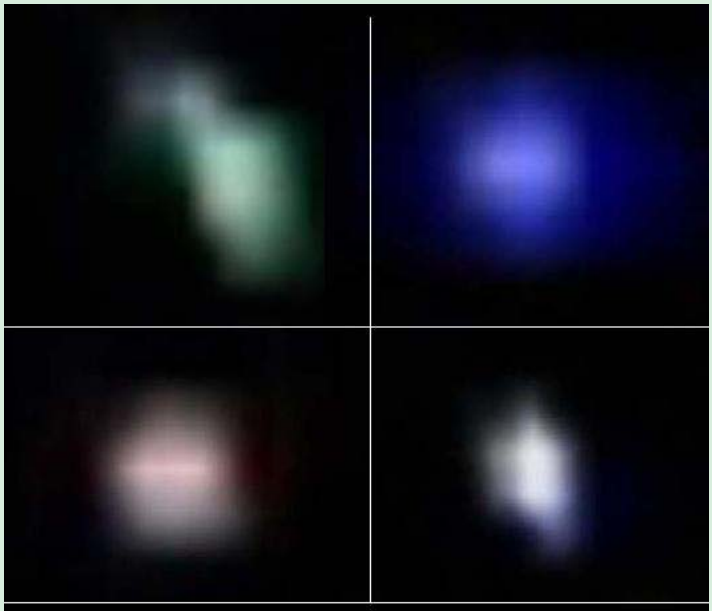
An expert in Pyrotechnics contacted me after reading about the flares connected to balloons story and watching the video taken of the red lights over Phoenix on April 21, 2008. Jim Blair has worked in the Pyrotechnics industry for many years. He's participated in hundreds of Fireworks displays and has helped design and set up shows for events ranging from private affairs to citywide shows throughout the USA.

Jim says that people have no idea how difficult it would be to create an effect like the one seen over Phoenix on Monday night, April 21, 2008 using helium balloons and flares. "We're not talking about candles and dry cleaning bags," he explained, "it would take a lot of effort to get a set up like that off the ground. You would need a special type of balloon that was designed to hold enough helium to stay aloft for a considerable amount of time and support the flares. It would be expensive and very difficult to launch from a small backyard. I can't believe that one person could do it by themselves."

Jim is not alone in his opinion that the balloons and flares theory isn't viable. A number of people working in the field of photographic analysis have problems with what the video shows and the flares explanation. They claim the lights are too stable and too bright to be flares. They point out that the movements are not like flares attached to balloons, but independent lights forming and reforming into different patterns. Former members of the military have pointed out that these could not be auto emergency flares and that flares used for military purposes are expensive, hard to work with and would be inappropriate to use with the kind of balloons available over the counter.

While people argue about the origin of the latest set of Phoenix Lights, they might have missed the fact that lights appeared in other places just before or right around the same time. In addition to the Kokomo lights in Indiana and the Oswego Lights seen in Illinois, unexplained lights appeared in the sky over

Lights in the Sky



Granville, Massachusetts, Lights

Granville, Massachusetts on April 18, 2008. As with many of the others, these lights formed up into a triangular shape and didn't appear to drift through the sky, but hovered over the area.

It's easy to create simple explanations for almost anything strange that happens in the sky. It's harder for those explanations to stand up to serious scrutiny. For example, despite continuing events in Erath County, Texas, where the now famous Stephenville Lights began appearing last December and witnesses have been harassed by members of the military, the news media seems happy to trot along its merry way and ignore what's happening.

I guess that all it takes to keep reporters happy are a few erroneous government statements, false explanations from bogus witnesses and the idea that UFOs cannot possibly be anything out of the ordinary. That's enough for them and they want that to be enough for you. It's been that way for many years, but I believe that not all of us are the Kool Aid drinkers they believe us to be. Some of us realize that we are not the center of the Universe, but merely live in it along with many others.

Your UFO Photos

This photo was sent to me by Steve from Mufon LA. He notes that it was taken by his wife who was on a trip with his father. He says, "My wife was down there with my father just a couple of weeks ago, accompanying him to Patagonia. He's always wanted to go. At any rate, on a ferry from Uruguay back to Buenos Aires, she had random notion to take a picture of the sky. She did not see anything but a couple of wispy clouds. She took the photo and didn't think any more of it. Later, my father was previewing the photos and found the one attached. Sure enough, a "chance UFO" was photographed (attached). I think it's an excellent shot. What do you think?"

Orb in Paradise

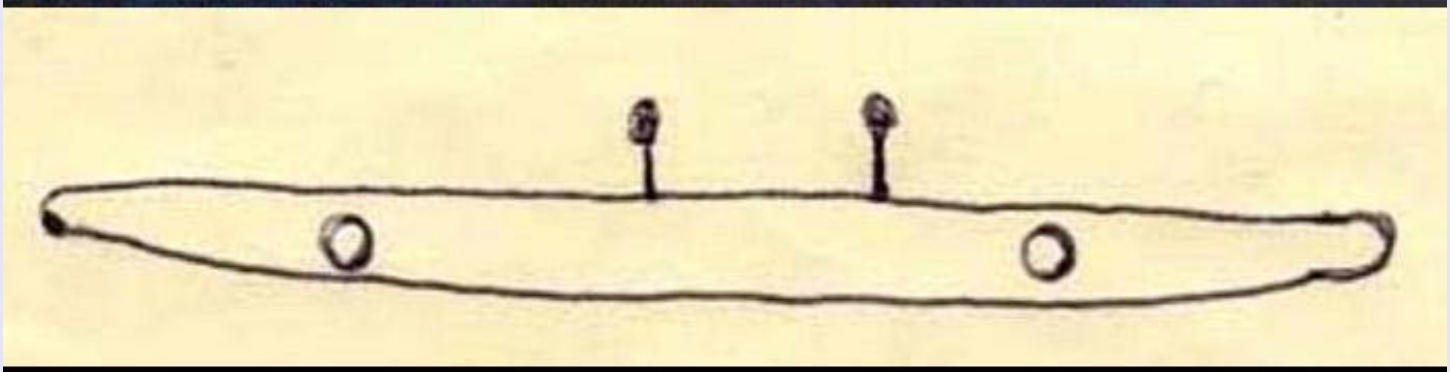
From Karen:

"Hi! On Friday,April 11th at 10:30 pm my husband had just done a meditation by Dr. Steven Greer and was compelled to get up and take this photo. It was pitch black out and deer were present (see the bright eyes on the left of the photo). When I downloaded it the next day we were stunned to see the bright blue orb and shocked to see what was in the window next to it!!! James Gilliland has acknowledged that it is a Pleadian vehicle but could not see the images in the window. I sent too small of a version of it to him. I am sending you an enlarged version. PLEASE let me know what you see. Sincerely, Karen"

UFO ALERT: Explosions, Strange Lights, Debris and Jets over Northern Indiana



(top) An object photographed over Indiana in January of 2008. (bottom) A drawing made by Erath County Constable Leroy Gaitan which shows an object that he saw in the sky.

It began on Tuesday night, April 15, 2008, when a number of people living in the Indiana towns of Kokomo and Logansport reported seeing strange lights in their skies, hearing what sounded like a huge explosion and seeing a giant fireball. The lights returned late Wednesday night and were accompanied by the sounds of more loud explosions, the presence of military jets and evidence of debris falling from the sky. Most of the Wednesday night reports came from Howard and Tipton Counties and sent police and firefighters scrambling.

First Responders headed out around 10:45pm to what they thought might be a plane crash after receiving 146 calls in fifteen minutes about the strange events which seemed to be centered around the area of U.S. 31 and 300 North. Although they found nothing there, calls continued to come in about the lights, sounds and an odd metallic smell that reportedly filled the air in downtown Kokomo. With no aircraft reported missing, local officials thought the whole thing might have involved a meteorite or some atmospheric phenomenon.

I became aware of the odd events after hearing about it on various news broadcasts and receiving five online sighting reports between Wednesday night and Thursday morning. Two of the five reports mentioned seeing falling debris that looked like spider webs, but evaporated shortly after falling on to roadways, grass and structures. UFO researchers refer to that kind of material as Angel Hair. It tends to vanish after a short period of time. How fast depends on the outside temperature. Despite reporting the falling to debris to the authorities, all the print and broadcast news reports quoted local authorities as saying that there was no evidence of any debris.

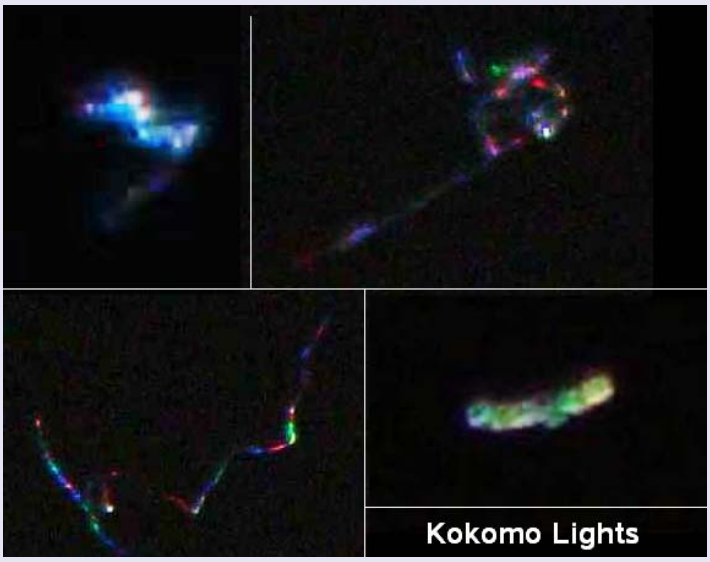
Most of the news reports also omitted the presence of strange lights from their reports of the events that occurred on Tuesday and Wednesday nights. All the reports I received mentioned lights that moved rapidly across the sky from east to west. One of the television news broadcasts did eventually mention the lights and showed interviews with several of the witnesses on Thursday.

The witnesses that contacted me reported seeing military jets along with the strange lights in the sky on Wednesday night. In fact, the military has come forward to take responsibility for everything that happened on those two nights. A press release from the office of Colonel Jeffrey Soldner, Commander of the 122nd Fighter Wing:

“Loud noises reported by citizens in northern Indiana accompanied by flashes of light and what appeared to be falling debris early this week were a result of training conducted by Indiana National Guard F-16 Aircraft, headquartered at Fort Wayne’s 122nd Fighter Wing.”

There are some problems with the official explanation. They begin with the noise heard on Tuesday night in the Logansport area. Described as "sonic booms" by the news media after the Air National Guard release, the actual sound heard was a single loud explosion that shook the walls of buildings and was followed by the appearance of a huge fireball in the sky. Smaller lights that darted around what looked like jets were also seen that night.

Several loud explosions were heard on Wednesday. While some of these may have been sonic booms, they do not explain the other events that occurred. By Thursday morning, most television news broadcasts throughout Indiana were calling the strange lights "flares" that were dropped by National Guard Jets involved in military exercises in the skies above the Kokomo and Logansport areas.



Kokomo Lights

Please note that the press release from the military mentioned nothing about flares. Even if flares were dropped, they would not have explained the lights that moved quickly across the sky or other strange events that occurred. Knowing that late night training exercises would cause this kind of panic, why would military officials fail to notify the local officials and the news media about them well in advance?

The metallic odor, single loud explosion heard on Tuesday and the follow-up events that occurred on Wednesday go way beyond military exercises. The witnesses that filed reports with me all said they could not recall the last time anything like this happened and none said they remembered military training exercises taking place late at night and causing such a melee.

The events in Northern Indiana were not isolated. A fishing boat captain reported seeing a huge object split into smaller lights off the coast of Atlantic City, New Jersey, at around 8pm on Wednesday night. He also said that a large tremor occurred about ten minutes after the object split into smaller lights. It's interesting to note that an earth quake occurred in the Midwest on Friday, April 18, 2008, and was felt throughout Indiana, parts of Illinois, Kentucky and Michigan. UFOs often appear en masse just before or after such events.

When the fishing boat captain made inquiries about what he saw happen in the sky off the Jersey Coast, the FAA said he had witnessed "military exercises." No statements from the military have verified that statement as of this writing. However, several reports of smaller, glowing objects were reported late Wednesday night over eastern Long Island and at least one of the reports mentioned a jet chase.

The events that occurred in Indiana on April 15th and 16th are very similar to those that took place in the skies over Stephenville, Texas, beginning in January of 2008. Sightings have continued in that area and this isn't the first time that events in both places have matched up. At the same time objects were being spotted over Stephenville, Texas, an object was photographed over Indiana in January that was identical to an object seen and later drawn by Leroy Gaitan, a Constable in Erath County, Texas.

Overall, the number and strangeness of UFO events are on the increase throughout the USA. Sadly, the news media still has never met a government press release about UFOs that they didn't like. Instead of investigating reports of UFOs as they would any other story, they tend to dismiss them out of hand as soon as anyone with government, military or scientific credentials offers an easy and very earthly explanation.

Strange Lights in the Sky and a Mystery Sphere Recovered in Alabama

It first appeared on Google Maps in a satellite photo and looked like a white sphere that appeared to be vibrating as it passed over Magnolia Park, Florida in 2005. The pearl-like object hovered at around 20,000 feet. Fast forward to April 25, 2008. Just around the time when strange lights were being seen in the skies over Indiana, New Jersey, Massachusetts and Arizona, they appeared over Decatur, Alabama.

TV Stations in nearby Huntsville, Alabama, reported that people were seeing lights in the sky over Decatur on April 25th around 11pm. A number of calls were received by emergency services and one witness, 17 year old Codey Terry (a student at Bob Jones High School in Madison) reported a frightening encounter. She described two bluish-white lights that suddenly appeared in front of her windshield while she was driving past the courthouse and on to Central Parkway in Decatur just after 11pm.

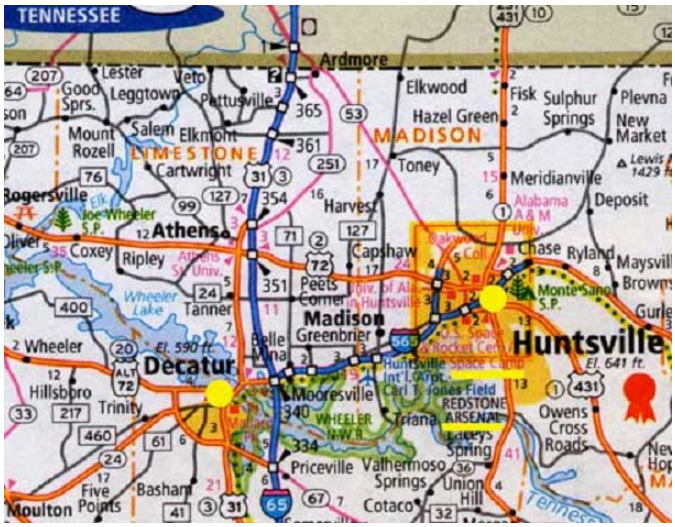
Codey said that the two bright lights looked like airplane lights. She thought that an aircraft making an emergency landing and was headed straight for her vehicle. Codey slammed on the brakes causing her car to spin around. After regaining her composure, she got out to see what was happening and found the strange lights hovering in mid-air. At that point, what appeared to be two lights became one extremely bright circle of blinding light. No one else was on the road at that time.

Barely able to watch the object as it hovered due to the brightness, she saw it suddenly start moving very fast toward the ground some distance away. There were never any sounds coming from the object while it was in the air and none as it made contact with the ground. During this time she was on the phone with her mom and described the entire event. Then, a strange situation got even stranger.

Fire trucks, other emergency vehicles and helicopters appeared out of nowhere and headed toward the area where the object hit the ground. Codey drove to her friend's house. While she was explaining what happened, more helicopters appeared in the sky. Codey and her friend Zack decided to follow them and see what was happening.

They arrived at a location called the Aquadome, a recreational center with a swimming pool, play ground and basketball courts. It's right next store to Brookhaven Middle School. Codey and Zack were able to get within fifteen feet of where a Med Fly helicopter from nearby Huntsville, Alabama, had set down.

Decatur Police vehicles arrived and got between them and the helicopter. Decatur Fire Department trucks also arrived. One parked near the helicopter, while the others drove around in a circle as if they were closing off the area. What appeared to be black, military helicopters circling overhead. All this took place in the Aquadome's parking lot.



Codey and her friend watched as emergency personnel loaded what looked like a giant pearl, a white shiny sphere, on to a stretcher. The personnel that dealt with the object were dressed in some sort of white, hazardous materials suits and seemed to be dusting off the sphere. After covering it with sheets that held the object tightly on the stretcher, they loaded it into an ambulance that pulled up near the helicopter and drove away.

A local news reporter and a woman were also on the scene when all this happened, both tried asking those present about what was happened, but were told nothing. The ambulance left around 11:40 and headed toward Huntsville accompanied by the fire trucks even though they were based in Decatur.

The Huntsville area is home to the Redstone Army Arsenal and a number of other military and government facilities including the U.S. Army Space and Military Defense Command and NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center. It's entirely possible that this object could have been some sort of a secret project. I asked someone in the know about it.

Jim Knowles is a recently retired electronics engineer that worked on a number of government projects over the years through various government contractors. After describing the events that occurred in Decatur to him, Jim said, "I have no personal knowledge of any type of vehicle, or something that might be a part of a government project, which comes close to what you described to me. I can't imagine any technology currently available to the government which might explain what was seen or recovered in Decatur."

Once again strange lights fill the skies over America. Once again the military responds quickly with aircraft. Once again the public is involved, but is told little or nothing about what happened. Once again the news media seems fine with allowing the whole thing to be swept under the rug. Once again the advantage of having a press free to report the news is no advantage at all when they cooperate with the government to censor the news they report.

Bigfoot: An Enigma with Many Possible Identities

By Bill Knell

A few years ago, I received a video from my good friend and experienced paranormal investigator, Dick Criswell. It was filmed in Oakland, Oregon, and involved an amazing guy named Stan Johnson and his unique understanding of Bigfoot. Sasquatch, Bigfoot, Yeti, Abominable Snowman or Skunk Ape; call it what you will. Most people think of the legendary creature as some sort of missing link or unidentified primate. Stan has a different view and it has caused me to reexamine my own conclusions about these beings.

I have watched Dick's video, On Bigfoot Mountain, dozens of times and that surprises me. When it comes to Paranormal Research, I like to keep my focus on the subject at hand and not the 'noise' surrounding it. Theories, ideas, channeled data, cults and everything else you can imagine really blurs the big picture and removes objectivity. However, Stan's information gave me some new ideas about the behavior of Bigfoot.

Johnson describes the Sasquatch as a race of intelligent beings that easily communicate with him and travel using portals. He mentions at least three portals that exist on the mountain where he lives. The portals seem to be entrances and exits to and from our physical reality. Not surprisingly, Bigfoot is often seen in these areas by a diverse group of witnesses.

Apart from the physical sightings, Johnson seems able to communicate with these beings on a mental or spiritual level. During those times, the Sasquatch need not be physically present. This makes me wonder who or what they really are. It may be that the Native Peoples of North America have a better understanding of Bigfoot than the rest of us. They have great respect for these beings and feel they represent a border or bridge between human and animal consciousness.

The Sasquatch that speaks to Johnson and others seem to have an understanding of our physical reality that we have not yet grasped. For example, their use of portals and manipulation of time and space really fascinated me. Not only would it explain their ability to suddenly appear and disappear, but it might also explain why other paranormal events occur in the same areas and at the same times as many Bigfoot sightings. My first investigation of a Bigfoot event was a good example of that scenario.

I became acquainted with the Florida version of Bigfoot in 1973 at the age of seventeen. People in the Sunshine State generally refer to it as a Skunk Ape or Yeti. Either way, descriptions are identical to what some Bigfoot researchers call unknown primate sightings and encounters worldwide. Nevertheless, the event I was investigating didn't occur in the middle of some thick forest or on a road rarely traveled in the Everglades. This was the Jungle Prada area of Saint Petersburg surrounded by water and suburban neighborhoods.

It was early October and I was investigating ghost light sightings reported to my high school UFO club. The lights appeared in the area of Jungle Prada Park at Park Street N and Elbow Lane. They were centered over a section of Boca Ciega Bay that separates Saint Petersburg from Treasure Island. Most people think of it as a channel because all the boat traffic and marine markers.

I arrived at the Jungle Prada just before dark with two friends which agreed to assist me in the investigation. We parked close to the shoreline hoping to speak with regulars that fished that area and might have noticed the lights. As we were getting our equipment out of the car, I noticed three helicopters in the area. They were not military and didn't look like police or emergency medical transport choppers.

Seeing a helicopter airborne in that area was not unusual. Many big corporations used them to get their people back and forth between Tampa and St Pete. There were also the air taxis that picked up and dropped off wealthy tourists flying between Tampa

The remains of the Tocobaga Indian Mounds in the Jungle Prada area as they look today.

International Airport and St Petersburg Beach. However, seeing three so close together in the sky at one time was very strange.

Before we could give the helicopters another thought, dozens of cars appeared out of nowhere. Most of the drivers were young people. I thought that maybe we had accidentally ended up in the middle of some kind of keg party or fraternity event. Seeing that we had some photography equipment, a tape recorder and note taking materials, one guy asked us, "Are you here looking for the Skunk Ape?"

We had no idea what he was talking about until we heard a couple of car radios that were blaring a local music station. Between songs, the DJ mentioned some listeners that called in to his studio earlier about seeing some sort of a large, hairy creature swimming in the bay near Jungle Prada. I asked my fellow investigators to snoop around while I located a payphone and called the radio station. I drove some distance to a gas station and made the call.

The DJ told me that listeners had been calling him for the past two hours. Most were frustrated when their calls to police or emergency numbers were largely ignored. The first few callers were people that were fishing along a pier when they saw the creature. Others were out in their boats at the time the creature was spotted. The best call came from a charter boat captain that regularly piloted his vessel through the area. The captain, crew and passengers all saw the creature. The captain contacted the Coast Guard.

Most of the witnesses that called were listening to the music station when the DJ asked people to call in with song requests and gave out the studio phone number. Instead, they called about the Skunk Ape. The DJ told me that he might have considered it all a prank, but this was a guy that listened to people call in for all sorts of reasons night after night. He had developed a knack for knowing when people were trying to pull a fast one on him.

Instead of ignoring the calls, the DJ wrote down what information he could from callers and repeated it during music breaks. The station had a policy against putting live callers on the air and the reel to reel normally available to him was being used by the news department which had closed and locked up its offices for the night.

Needless to say, I spent most of my time there trying to track down any witnesses to the event that might still be in the area. Thanks to some information from the DJ, I was able to narrow my search to the pier area and found two people that had called the station. After calling from a convenience store, they returned to the area to see if the creature had come back.

The Richardson's were a young couple that came out to enjoy the sunset by the water's edge. Along with some other people fishing and hanging out nearby, they said that a large creature suddenly appeared in the water. It was swimming toward the shoreline just north of where they were standing. The creature swam much like a human, but it was very large and hairy. Still in amazement over the event, the witnesses said that it came up on the shore and ran into the tree line like a person would. Not thinking, everyone ran up to that area and trampled over any footprints that might have been left behind.

The couple took me to that area along the shore and we searched through it with large flashlights, but too many people had already been there. There was no way to discern specific footprints in the sand or know if the creature or crowd had caused damage to small trees and other growths. A more thorough search the next day turned up nothing unusual.

Most people might consider it more than a bit strange that Bigfoot would share the spotlight with Ghost Lights in same area at the same time. However, Jungle Prada is the original paranormal exception to the rule. It is one of the oldest, most historic, haunted, troubled and mysterious parts of St Petersburg, Florida, or anywhere else for that matter.

The Tocobaga Indians built burial mounds and villages in the area as early as 900 AD and thrived right up until the arrival of the Spanish Conquistadors in 1528. They allegedly enslaved, killed and infected the Tocobaga with disease. Within one hundred years, the natives were extinct. However, remnants of their mounds remain and so do their ghosts.

Physical After-effects of UFO Abductions

Of course, a further objection to the all-mental theory is that scars and infectious diseases have been reported in connection with UFO abductions. Budd Hopkins is well known for his claim that abductees sometimes bear scars, which they associate directly or indirectly with UFO encounters. One example is Virginia Horton, whose illusory deer encounter is mentioned above [see Alien Identities, pages 249-50]. She also told of a deep, profusely bleeding but painless cut that she received as a six-year-old child. In her conscious recollections, the cut was memorable because at the time she was unable to explain to her elders how she had got it. Under hypnosis, she related an elaborate abduction scenario in which aliens of the typical 'Grey' variety took her into a circular room illuminated by diffuse, pearly grey light and made the cut with some kind of machine. They explained to her that 'we need a little, bitty piece of you for understanding'.

The noted UFO researcher Raymond Fowler has also described under hypnosis a nightmarish, dreamlike experience in which he seemed to be manipulated by beings that he could not see. This would seem to be a good candidate for a purely mental experience but for the fact that it occurred on the night before a mysterious, unexplained scar appeared on his leg. This scar was said by a dermatologist to resemble the mark made by a punch biopsy.

Fowler cited research into scars and other medical sequelae of UFO encounters that was carried out by Dr Richard N. Neal, a specialist in obstetrics and gynaecology at the Beach Medical Center in Lawndale, California. Neal maintained that scars tend to show up on the bodies of abductees in a consistent manner. Thus, 'scars have been observed on the calf (including just over tibia or shin bone), thigh, hip, shoulder, knee, spinal column and on the right sides of the back and forehead'. These scars tend to be either thin, straight hairline cuts about 2-3 inches long or circular depressions about 1/8-inch to 3/4-inch in diameter and as much as 1/4-inch deep.

Other kinds of bodily marks have also been noted, such as rashes on the upper chest or the legs that are often geometrical in shape. First or second degree burns have been noted, as well as infections and unusual growths. For example, there are two examples of women reporting severe vaginal infections after UFO abductions that involved gynaecological examinations.

The very fact that abduction witnesses report invasive physical examinations suggests that their experiences are not simply mental. Dr Neal pointed out, "Aliens have taken blood, oocytes (ova) from females and spermatozoa from males, and tissue scrapings from their subjects' ears, eyes, noses, calfs, thighs and hips". Sometimes tubes are inserted into women's navels – an operation that was described to Betty Hill as a pregnancy test by her captors. It has been pointed out that this operation is similar to a gynaecological testing procedure called laparoscopy that was developed years after Betty and Barney Hill's abduction experience in September 1961.

Finally, we shouldn't overlook the controversial topic of probes that are inserted into the nose by alien entities. As Dr Neal put it, "Many abductees have described a thin probe with a tiny ball on its end being inserted into the nostril - usually on the right side. They are able to hear a 'crushing' type sound as the bone in this area is apparently being penetrated. Many will have nosebleeds following these examinations". Fowler and Hopkins give examples of this, and it seems to come up repeatedly in UFO accounts.

From time to time, investigators have claimed that such probes have been recovered from people's bodies for examination. However, I have yet to see any reliable publication describing a systematic study of a recovered probe.

One could postulate that people may imagine physical experiences, such as having probes inserted into their bodies. However, it is not clear what their inner motive would be for imagining such things. Many UFO abductees reporting these experiences have been tested psychologically and found to be quite normal. So their testimony cannot be attributed to abnormal mental processes.

One could also postulate that beings acting on a subtle level might be able to invoke in people's minds traumatic experiences that would result in physical symptoms. There are cases in which people have developed bleeding wounds called stigmata, apparently under the influence of intense religious emotions.

There are also reports that a particular pattern of reddened skin, such as a cross, can be produced by hypnotic suggestion. Could it be that the physical symptoms of UFO abductions are similarly produced by some form of psychical influence?

One reply to this is that some abduction cases involve physical traces on objects or on the ground that suggest the presence of some physically real agent. Examples would be the ground traces reported by Budd Hopkins in the Kathie Davis case, or the strange shiny spots appearing on the car of Betty and Barney Hill after their UFO experience. Also, there are abduction cases, such as those of Travis Walton, William Herrmann, and Filiberto Cardenas, in which the abductee was dropped off by the UFO miles from his pickup point.

There is certainly a great deal of evidence indicating that UFOs can become manifest as physically real vehicles, and there is also much evidence suggesting that people are sometimes physically taken on board these vehicles. However, since some UFO abductions do seem to involve out-of-body experiences, the idea that trauma on a subtle, mental level can bring about gross physical effects should be carefully considered. To illustrate what might happen, consider the following account of a near-death experience occurring in India:

In the late 1940s, an Indian man named Durga Jatav suffered for several weeks from a disease diagnosed as typhoid. At a certain point his body became cold for a couple of hours, and his family thought he had died. But he revived and told his family that he had been taken to another place by ten people. After attempting to escape from them, they cut off his legs at the knees to prevent further attempts. Then they took him to a place where about forty or fifty people were sitting. They looked up his 'papers', declared that the wrong man had been fetched, and ordered his captors to take him back. When he pointed out that his legs had been cut off, he was shown several pairs of legs and recognised his own. These were somehow reattached, and he was warned not to 'stretch' his knees until they had a chance to heal.

After his revival, his sister and a neighbour both noticed that he had deep folds or fissures in the skin on the fronts of his knees, even though such marks had not been there previously. The marks were still visible in 1979, but x-rays taken in 1981 showed no abnormality beneath the surface of the skin. Could it be that the experience of having his legs cut off in a subtle realm caused these marks on his physical legs?

Ian Stevenson has assembled a large amount of evidence indicating that young children who spontaneously remember previous lives sometimes bear birthmarks on their bodies corresponding to injuries received during those lives. He has about 200 cases of this type, and he says that in fifteen he has been able to match up birthmarks with postmortem reports describing the previous body. Regarding these birthmarks, he made the following observation: "Some marks are simply areas of increased pigmentation; in other cases, the birthmark is three- dimensional, the area being partly or wholly elevated, depressed, or puckered. I have examined at least two hundred of this kind, and many of them cannot be distinguished, at least by me, from the scars of healed wounds." The point about scars is especially significant in connection with UFO abductions.

In the case of Durga Jatav, one can imagine that some psychical influence injected into his brain the idea that his legs had been cut off, and this in turn resulted in the fissures in his knees. However, if a wound in one life can affect a body in another, then more must be involved than just the brain.

An explanation can be devised if we introduce the idea that the soul, encased in a body made of subtle energy, is able to transmigrate from one gross physical body to another. In that case, one can suppose that the fatal injury in one life traumatised the subtle body, and this resulted in birthmarks in the developing embryo in the next life. One could likewise suppose that Durga Jatav's subtle body was traumatised in a subtle domain, and this resulted in the knee fissures when his subtle body was returned to his gross body.

A wide variety of physical effects can apparently be produced by subtle action. Here is an example involving a man named Mangal Singh who experienced a [Near-Death Experience] NDE in about 1977 while in his early 70s. He described his experience as follows:

I was lying down on a cot when two people came, lifted me up, and took me along. I heard a hissing sound, but I couldn't see anything. Then I came to a gate. There was grass, and the ground seemed to be sloping. A man was there, and he reprimanded the men who had brought me: "Why have you brought the wrong person? Why have you not brought the man you had been sent for?" The two men ran away, and the senior man said, "You go back". Suddenly I saw two big pots of boiling water, although there was no fire, no firewood and no fireplace. Then the man pushed me with his hand and said, "You had better hurry up and go back". When he touched me, I suddenly became aware of how hot his hand was. Then I realised why the pots were boiling. The heat was coming from his hands.

On returning to consciousness, Mangal felt a severe burning sensation in his left arm. This area developed the appearance of a boil and left a residual mark after healing. He was apparently unable to describe the appearance of the 'men' he had met.

The stories of Durga Jatav and Mangal Singh are part of a group of sixteen Indian near-death accounts collected by Satwant Pasricha and Ian Stevenson. They observed that in these cases messengers typically come to take the witness, in contrast to Western NDEs, in which the witness generally meets other beings only after being translated to 'another world'. Pasricha and Stevenson noted that their Indian subjects naturally identify these messengers with the Yamadutas, the agents of Yamaraja, the lord of the dead in traditional Hinduism.

They also pointed out that the evident cultural differences between Indian and Western NDEs do not necessarily demonstrate that these experiences are simply unreal mental concoctions. It is possible that persons near death are treated differently in different cultures by personalities on the subtle level. There could be different policies for groups of people with different karmic situations.

According to Vedic literature, the transmigration of souls is regulated by the Yamadutas, or servants of Yamaraja. The Yamadutas serve as functionaries in the celestial hierarchy, and they are equipped with mystic powers, or siddhis, that enable them to carry out their duties. They are described as having a very negative, fearful disposition. Nonetheless, they are employed by higher authorities for the positive purpose of reforming the consciousness of souls entangled in material illusion.

Generally, when the Yamadutas take a person, he doesn't return to tell the tale. But Vedic accounts do mention some cases where someone returns. There is the story from the Bhagavata Purana of Ajamila, a sinful man who uttered 'Narayana', a name of God, when seeing the Yamadutas at the time of death. As a result of this action, several effulgent servants of Narayana intervened and told the Yamadutas not to touch Ajamila. There followed a debate between the Yamadutas and the servants of Narayana on the laws regarding the treatment of departed souls. Finally, the Yamadutas accepted defeat in this debate and departed from the scene, and Ajamila was revived from apparent death.

There are UFO encounter cases involving the capture-by-mistake theme of the Indian NDEs. In Chapter 9 of Alien Identities, I presented the story of a woman and her son who were abducted by strange beings and taken on board a UFO while driving near Cimarron, New Mexico. In this case, the woman and boy were physically dragged away by strange 'men'. The woman was subjected to a harrowing physical examination, after which a tall, authoritative 'man' appeared on the scene and angrily declared that the woman should not have been taken and should be sent back. Not only that, but the tall man placed his hand on the woman's forehead, and she was burned by it. This is reminiscent of the Indian NDE cases, and of the case of Mangal Singh, in particular.

However, the woman came down with a severe vaginal infection after the experience, apparently as a result of the examination she received on the UFO. Was this due to a subtle examination, or was it caused by a botched physical examination?

Another example illustrating the theme of capture by mistake is an encounter story related by Emily Cronin. (This is a different encounter from the one mentioned previously.) On this occasion, Emily, her young son, and her friend Jan were resting by the side of a road called Ridge Route near Los Angeles. She consciously remembered seeing a bright yellow light, hearing a high-pitched whine that seemed to have a paralysing effect, and feeling the car shaking. Under hypnosis, she said that a strange, tall figure in black was looking in the back window of the car and was

LOST TECHNOLOGY OF THE ANCIENTS:
DID THE BUILDERS OF MEGALITHIC MONUMENTS KNOW THIS SECRET?

by Pitaya

Copyright © Pitaya 2008

A recent book, Seed of Knowledge, Stone of Plenty, by John Burke (the B in "BLT Research Team") and his colleague Kaj Halberg (Council Oaks Books, 2005: ISBN #1-57178-184-6 and ISBN #978-1-57178-184-0) presents scientifically documented evidence that the old-world engineers who built the massive henges, pyramids, mounds and dolmen of the ancient world may well have understood a true secret show that these structures were overwhelmingly sited at locations where the local geology magnified naturally-occurring electromagnetic fluctuations in the earth's crust and, further, that pyramidal and corbel- roofed stone structures erected at these locations enhanced this effect.

Additionally, they reveal that indigenous seeds, when placed at these locations (for various periods of time, depending upon the type of seed) show significant increases in growth rate and yield when subsequently planted and/or drought conditions). Such results would have been of enormous importance to ancient peoples and the authors suggest that the monument-builders not only knew these facts, but deliberately chose these sites and structure-shapes in order to insure their culture's food production.

Burke and Halberg conducted instrument surveys at various old-world monuments such as the King's and Queen's Pyramids in Tikal, Guatemala, and at Olmec mounds and various other monuments of the pre-Incan civilisation at Tiwanaku on the shores of Lake Titicacca, as well as at English henges and at the oldest megaliths in the world (circa 4,800 BC) at Carnac, in the Brittany section of France. Magnetometer surveys were also carried out at many American Indian "vision quest" sites, some of which are still in use today by Native people, and the readings obtained at these sacred sites were among the highest found anywhere.

People interested in the crop circle phenomenon will be familiar with some of the photographic anomalies obtained during this project: "ball of light"(BOL) and other light anomalies similar to those regularly obtained in and around crop circles all over the world. But they may be unaware that stone structures, particularly when built in a conical or pyramidal shape over a naturally-occurring EM hot-spot, concentrate these energies intensified electric charge in the surrounding air and, under certain conditions, BOLs and plasma arc discharges.

Also familiar to individuals who are aware of the scientific research conducted on crop circle plants is the fact that seedlings grown from seeds taken from plants inside the formations regularly exhibit abnormal growth patterns, relative to control seedlings: [www.bltresearch.com/plantab.html, item #5 (a)(b)(c)(d)]. We know that when crop circles occur early in the growth season the seeds from these plants show significantly retarded growth habit. Of perhaps greater interest is the fact that seedlings grown from seeds obtained from late-season crop circles show not only a marked increase in growth-rate, these plants produce greater yield than the controls, in conjunction with increased resistance to "growth stressors" (lack of sunlight and/or water).

Following the discovery of these germination and growth changes in crop circle plant seeds, research carried out by W.C. Levengood and John Burke eventually resulted in the development of a non-chemical, non-genetic technology) which stimulates normal seeds to produce beneficial antioxidants (www.proseedtech.com/MIR_process.htm). This MIR Stress Guard process improves the seedlings' ability to withstand free radicals, resulting in the same increased growth rate and yield, and increased resistance to plant stressors, with no harmful environmental consequences.

And so it is extremely interesting to learn that Burke and Halberg's experiments with seeds indigenous to each specific location studied produced similar results. Seeds placed on top of the "Lost World" pyramid at Tikal (below) show increased growth-rate relative to their controls.

Contemporary Mayan maize seedlings (at eleven days) grown at Tikal. Samples had been placed on top of the "Lost World" pyramid on a morning with extremely powerful electrical activity.

Below, forty seeds of "Iroquois Blue Flint" corn which had been placed inside a Native American rock chamber with highly magnetic stone roof-slabs not only grew almost 100% faster than forty controls, they produced three times as much corn, by weight.

Comments made by people who have read Seed of Knowledge, Stone of Plenty: "a direct connection between the world of the shaman and [S] scientist" "an entirely new way to look at ancient engineering marvels" "the results are clear and compelling" "one new fact after another" "a great read"

And these remarks from Boston University geology professor Dr Robert Schoch (author of Pyramid Quest and the scientist who first re-dated the carving of the Great Sphinx in Egypt, based on weathering patterns caused by water, rather than wind, erosion):

"Utterly fascinating. These ideas provide a new and groundbreaking approach to understanding the mysteries of ancient megalithic stuctures.

"John Burke's unusual background in physics and agriculture [his crop circle work with the BLT Research Team and subsequent collaboration with W.C. Levengood on the MIR Stressguard process] allowed him to see what no one else has before: a practical purpose for the imposing stone structures that amaze and baffle us today. Along with co-author Kaj Halberg, Burke set outon a journey of scientific exploration, which resulted in experimental proof of his original theory. This theory describes a technology of the ancientsonly now rediscovered.

"From North and South America to Great Britain and beyond, Seed of Knowledge, Stone of Plenty: Understanding the Lost Technology of the Ancient Megalithic-Builders takes the reader through the process of discovery,invites the readers to see the evidence and even participate themselves. Two appendices give location listings of the sites readily accessible in theUnited States, Canada and Great Britain, along with do-it-yourself instructions on how to replicate Burke and Halberg's experiments."

THE RAZORBACK INCIDENT

by Ray Stark

Copyright © R. Stark 2005

Everyone has fond childhood yarns from their favourite relative. Mine happened to be of UFO stories my uncle Ted told me when I was very young. Chasing these stories today is leading some further research to find some answers. One particular stood out as a scary UFO story involving many people south west of Sydney during the late 1960s.

Now my uncle Ted, a bushy at heart liked many a country weekend trip to "get away from it all" as he would say. That is why he believes he had so many sightings, during that time.

He heard of a UFO hotspot south of Sydney at Razorback about 10 km south of Campbelltown. There are still reports today in the Campbelltown area according to the UFO Society Western Sydney. These ranges extend east to west near the town of Picton. It has a magnificent view of Sydney from that lookout. Ted ventured there often, meeting groups of people having sightings. In this area back then there were a few scattered farmhouses spaced kilometres apart.

On one occasion, a bright glowing object slowly encircled him on the ridge. He became inspired to build a type of detection device so he could be alerted. It consists of a simple bush compass which triggers an alarm to any approaching magnetic fields emitted from these 'craft', as he would call them. The making of this device is described elsewhere for readers to build.

One weekend he brought with him some curious friends to Razorback Ridge. Ted and his five sceptical companions drove up to the ridge for a typical UFO spotting night.

They drove off road onto a tree-filled track, across a creek and up a gentle sloping hill. A group of about 20 boy scouts were camped on the edge of a wide cleared field near the bottom of the hill. The gentle slope of the upward facing hill, to the east, is partitioned off with a fence, which runs diagonally from the plateaued hill to the west downhill. (Pic1 looking southeast) On the other side of that fence, the farmer had freshly ploughed his field.

He parked about 20 metres up the hill from the scout camp. A curious scoutmaster came up and asked them, "What you doing here boys?" He said, "We're looking for UFOs". The scoutmaster shook his head sceptically and replied, "There's no UFOs around here". Ted responded, "Give it time, there will be", not bothering to explain the many previous sightings in the area.

Setting up camp and stoking a fire with his eager "I-don't-believe-it-till-I-see-it" colleagues early that afternoon, Ted adjusted his UFO detector while sipping coffee, confident and patient enough for something to happen. One could clearly see much detail of the surrounding countryside under the brightness of the full moon. Hours passed until about 11.00 pm, when the detectors' alarm sounded. (Pic2 Camp)

Shining a torch on the compass, its needle slowly turned about 180-degrees away from magnetic north pointing towards the top of the hill over 400 metres away. They looked all around and upwards to the top of the hill, but saw nothing unusual.

A small breakaway group of about five scouts came up from their camp, curious about the sound of the alarm. Ted told them that the device detected UFOs, so the whole group decided to walk towards the top. The boy scouts followed cautiously five metres behind them. The scouts were curious but hesitant of what Ted's intentions were and what would be found.

A 50 metre walk, they had to jump over the fence before they could reach the top. On the hill was a large power pole with antennas, next to a red small brick shed. The shed could not be seen from their vantage point, as it was six metres away, south of the edge of the plateau. (Pic 2)

"We went up to the top as we didn't know what was going on." They couldn't see the usual bright light or any movement. The scouts hesitated or probably were conscientious not to cross the old fence, and so remained behind watching them. The whole field was freshly ploughed. They could see their own footprints in the dirt. "It was a full moon night. It was very clear and bright, you could see everything around you." They crossed over the fence until they were about six metres past it. At about 40 metres, from the top of the hill, one of Ted's friends suddenly called out to stop. (Pic3)

"Well we were half way up the hill when this 'critter' appeared up from behind the post. This 'thing' starts walking towards us down the hill. Well, we all shit ourselves! We were all looking at each other, wondering, 'Shit, what's going on, should

we hike it or what?' Well I said no bugger it, I'm going to stand here long as I can and see what's going to happen." (Pic3)

He could clearly see the light of the full moon reflecting off some type of metallic suit-like material it wore, "a type of Ned Kelly type of mask on a square looking head thing" with no distinguishing features on it. He described it as a big bulky walking person with a black material cloak or cape hanging from behind it. It could not have been a man in a suit because it walked in proportion to its bending knees and elbows. The incline was steep (Pic6) and "because it stood over 8 feet high!" (Pic4) Over ten people witnessed it. The other scouts with their scoutmaster were at the other camp and Ted could not remember if they saw anything or not from their vantage point.

It continued towards them. Ted was deciding to lead his friends away as some were increasingly more frightened as it came towards them. Some were backing up waiting for Ted to move but bravely stood his ground instead. He was more curious of how "it walked like a robot and it didn't walk like we do!"

He thought to move when "I was just to about to take off in fright when this thing was about 30 feet away, with its huge metal feet suddenly stopped with its feet (stood) together."

Then suddenly the thing moved again "instead of turning round and walking sideways (from us), it stepped sideways facing us!" As it pivoted sideways for several steps, its black cape clearly rocked from side to side behind it.

This, he thought, was very strange. But curious enough not to take off in fright to see what else would happen, Ted told me.

"It moved over and stepped about 20 feet sideways and stopped. We were looking at this thing and everybody's looking at each other shitting themselves!" They were all perplexed and then fascinated at this unusual sight. Their curiosity overcame their fear [and the desire to] take off, they all told Ted later. "We were standing there looking at this thing for a couple of minutes. Nothing happened, it was just standing there looking at us and we were gorking at it! So next thing you know another one comes out from behind the trig station (on top of the hill)!" (Trigonometric mapping point on tripod, (see Pic 5&6)

The shed could not be seen from their angle, as the edge of the hilltop was over 15 metres away. The shed was six metres south from the edge. (Pic6) The metallic beings' head, however, appeared suddenly as if it came from behind the shed, Ted later would describe.

"The same thing happens. This 'thing' comes down, stops and walks sideways and stood next to the other metal 'thing!" In the end there ended up seven of them standing in a row facing us!"

There seemed a longer time of no more

'metal-things' coming or anything else happening. "Well that was enough for me, I turned in fright, everybody else just turned and went for their bloody lives. It frightened the shit out of us! Most of the people didn't go back the way we came. Most jumped the fence in random directions, the others went further down to jump the fence back to the camps over 400 metres away." (Pic7)(The camp may have been further near the bottom of the hill then marked on photo).

"As I went down the hill across a small gully, I tripped over something. I got up quickly and saw that it was a dead calf. Well that made me more scared. So I ran even faster up the other side of the gully to the camp. I don't know why the 'things' didn't come after us, I guess it's just how fright affects you."

As the boys regrouped around the car, the scouts returned to their camp. They stayed vigilant and recounted their frightening experiences. Some stayed awake and some slept unsoundly at least for a few hours past daylight the next day.

On rising from a broken sleep, Ted decided to go back to the spot where they took flight and fright.

"The dirt was still nice and soft on the freshly ploughed field and we could clearly see own footprints everywhere. Walking to where the 'things' were standing, we found footprints! But the funny part was that there was only one set of footprints which really puzzled us. There were seven 'things' standing there that we saw last night and you could see seven pairs of where they stood. Well we couldn't work that one out."

The size of the footprint was enormous, over 30 cm from heel to toe. The embedded tracks where the robot-like-things stood were over 150 mm deep. In comparison their own footprints were quite shallow. Over 20 mm at the most. The gaits of their walk to the standing spot

THE FANTASTIC FLIGHT OF JAL1628
SILHOUETTE OF A GIGANTIC SPACESHIP.... PART 1

by Bruce Maccabee

This is the compete report on the UFO sighting by the Japanese crew of a jumbo freighter aircraft in November 1986. This sighting gained international attention when the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) announced that it was going to officially investigate this sighting because the Air Route Traffic Control Centre in Anchorage, Alaska, had reported that the UFO had been detected on radar. More recently (May 2001) this sighting case has become prominent once again as a result of the CSTI Disclosure Project (http://cseti.org).

One of the government witnesses presented by CSTI, John Callahan, former Division Manager for Accidents, Evaluations and Investigations in the Washington D.C. headquarters of the FAA, has cited this case as evidence that UFOs are real. The official documents cited by Callahan in his Disclosure Project interview were used to create the report presented here.

What you will read here is a MORE complete report than the FAA presented to President Reagan's science advisors, the CIA, the FBI and others. In fact, if the truth be told, the FAA did not do a very thorough investigation, as you will see at the end of this report.)

When the FAA announced that it was going to investigate, the airplane captain, Knju Terauchi became a media star. He was featured on numerous radio and TV programs and in People Magazine. Unfortunately his career suffered for his indiscretion of reporting a UFO. Within a few months of these events he was grounded, even though he was a senior captain with an excellent flying record. Several years later he was reinstated.

What you are about to read is the most complete and analytical investigation of this sighting ever published. This was originally published in the International UFO Reporter, March/April 1987, published by the Centre for UFO Studies. This report took up the whole issue of the IUR.

Numbers in parentheses refer to footnotes at the end of the paper.

In mid-October 1986, Captain Kenju Terauchi was excited to learn of a special Japan Airlines flight from Paris to Anchorage and then on to Tokyo. It was to carry a cargo of French wine. There would be an intermediate stop at Reykjavik, Iceland.

The flight began on 16 November 1986, with himself and a crew of two (copilot and flight engineer) in the cockpit. The plane landed in Iceland and waited for good weather. The next day the plane took off heading north-northwest. A bright moon helped with the visibility for the night flight over Greenland but as the plane continued over northern Canada the moon stayed behind them. When the plane reached an Air Route Reporting Point in far northwestern Canada called Shingle Point, the sky ahead was dark except for an afterglow of sun in the west. The plane reported its position to the Flight Control Centre at Edmonton, Alberta, and continued across the Canada-Alaska border, and it was here it made history, UFO history, that is.

Although this wasn't a routine flight, it nevertheless was not expected to be a newsworthy event. But something happened over Alaska which caught the attention of the world for several days in late December and early January 1987. Virtually every newspaper in the world carried a story about what Captain Terauchi and his crew saw over Alaska. This is the story of that sighting as told to the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) by the crew members and the flight controllers on the ground.

UNIDENTIFIABLE LIGHTS

It was about eleven minutes past five, local time, late afternoon of 17 November, while Flight JAL1628 was high over the frozen northeastern part of Alaska, that Captain Terauchi first realised that the lights to the left and below were unusual. He had first noticed them about a minute earlier while his plane was turning to the left. After watching them for a short time he decided that they were lights of "special(ly) missioned aircrafts or two fighters" on some mission.

(Note: The Air Force maintained continual air surveillance over Alaska because of its proximity to the (former) Soviet Union.) He decided to ignore them but 'the position of the lights had not changed even after a few minutes and that called our attention'. In other words, the lights appeared to be travelling along with his plane.(1,2)

At that time the Boeing 747 freighter was operating on autopilot and heading southwestward (a heading of about 215-degrees) at an altitude of 35,000 feet.(3) The sky to the right had an afterglow of sunset but ahead and to the left it was very dark.

The Anchorage Air Route Traffic Control Centre (ARTCC) had called the plane just about two minutes before this time, i.e. at 5:09:20 (4,5) (exact times are based on the AARTCC tape recorded record of the events) to report the initial radar contact with the plane, which at that time was about 90 nautical miles (nm) northeast of Fort Yukon. (1 nm = 1.15 statute miles = 1.85 km) Referring to a map, the plane at this time was over the upper right hand corner of Alaska. The flight controller had asked the plane to head directly towards an Air Route Reporting Point called Talkeetna, named after the small Alaskan town nearby, north of Anchorage and not far from Mt McKinley.(4) In doing so, the plane would pass south of Fort Yukon and Fairbanks. The copilot who handle the aircraft communications acknowledged the AARTCC request and then turned the plane to the left about 15-degrees to a heading of 215-degrees. It was during this turn that Captain Terauchi, sitting on the left side of the cockpit, first saw the unidentifiable lights out his side window.(2) see Figure 1

After the plane levelled out he observed "lights that looked like aircraft lights, 30-degrees left front, 2,000 feet below us, moving exactly in the same direction and with the same speed we were". At that time the airplane was flying at about 525 knots ground speed (605 mph) according to the tracking data.(3) Subsequently the speed decreased to about 500 knots.

It is important to note the pilot's statement of his belief that the lights were 2,000 feet below him. He could not know how far below the lights were just from his visual sighting. To determine the distance below he would have to know the exact depression angle and the distance to the lights. Nevertheless his statement indicates that his sighting line to the lights had a noticeable depression angle (the angle below horizontal). At 35,000 feet the horizon distance is about 214 nm so the depression angle from the horizon is about1.5-degrees, which is hardly noticeable. The pilot's statement therefore implies that the lights were below, probably considerably below, his horizon, i.e. between himself and the ground, thus ruling out any astronomical source for the lights.

THROUGH THE LOOKING GLASS DARKLY:
IMPOSSIBLE CREATURES

Many parts of the world enjoy the curious distinction of apparently harbouring mysterious creatures that have captivated the minds of investigators – the so-called "monster-hunters", and others who are interested in the subject.

Some of these creatures are: the Loch Ness monster, Bigfoot, the elusive Yeti of the Himalayan range, and the Australian "Yowie", amongst others; all are examples of beings that have eluded the best human efforts to capture them.

Nonetheless, there are also unique creatures whose apparitions have been documented during a certain time period, only to again disappear without leaving a trace never to be seen again. Into this category we place West Virginia's infamous "Mothman" and other lesser known types.

Grant Callison, a resident of Galesburg, Illinois, knew something-beyond-the-realm-of-normal-experience was transpiring when he saw three winged beings flying in the night skies on 10 May 1968. From their kitchen, Grant and his wife Wilma noticed that the beings flying at an estimated altitude of 500 feet were covered in feathers, or metallic scales of some sort, which acquired an odd fluorescence as they reflected light from the local street lamps. The trio of flyers lacked necks and had short, conical tails! "It was an incredible and frightening sight," according to the witnesses.

This was not to be Callison's only sighting either: a few days later, while visiting with relatives, Grant's brother, Ward Callison, asked if they had seen anything unusual several nights earlier. After hearing the account of his brother's sighting, Ward admitted having seen the very same creatures following a northeasterly trajectory that went over their house. His description of the enigmatic beings coincided with Grant's down to the smallest details.

Five months later, and at the same time of night, another "giant bird" or "winged being" flew directly over Grant and Wilma. The couple noticed that this particular creature appeared to have some sort of difficulty with its right wing, which was kept rigid and several degrees below the left one (it had a 15 to 20 foot [5 to 6.5 metre] wingspan). The flying creature appeared to take notice of the two humans, and fixed its gaze on them as it flew away. "That really scared us," Grant confessed, "and we went inside the house for the rest of the evening".

In the Callisons' opinion, the creatures were naturally not native to this world, implying that their origin had to be extraterrestrial, or extradimensional. The couple had not heard of Mothman's forays in West Virginia, nor did they ever see the flying creatures again. This weird succession of experiences was collected by researcher Thomas Adams for his Stigmata magazine. Perhaps the Callisons would have been put at ease by the fact that an anonymous young sailor in the Italian navy during World War Two, had shared a similar experience, which was later investigated by Sergio Conti of Italy's Giornale del Misteri.

While the battleship Duilio was anchored at the port of Toscana in 1945, the sailor looked up from his post on the ship's bridge at something in the skies which drew his attention. From a distance, it clearly resembled a formation of migrating birds flying in a 'V' formation, following the leader in perfect alignment. Having nothing better to do, the sailor reached for a pair of binoculars and was treated to an unexpected sight. The birds turned out to be flying humans endowed with powerful wings, heading toward the battleship in a steady glide. Their faces were entirely human, and the leader, occupying the vertex of the 'V', appeared to be engaged in conversation with his companion on the right. The massive wings were strangely motionless, and their legs ended in powerful, three-toed claws. Their bodies were entirely covered in feathers except for their faces. The sailor abandoned his post in order to find witnesses to the amazing sight, but when he returned, the creatures had predictably disappeared.

Another instance of creatures seen only once and never again can be found in the case of the "orang minyak" (oily man) who terrorised the residents of the Malaysian capital, Kuala Lumpur, in the early 1960s. Carys Evans, a student in a Malaysian school at the time, remembers the panic created by stories of such a creature also allegedly endowed with supernatural powers. Orang minyak had the physical appearance of a human covered in oil, and "was impossible to capture due to the ability to literally slip and slide out of the hands of his captors," according to Evans. The "oily man" was allegedly responsible for a considerable number of rapes.

British author Harold Wilkins mentioned a pair of truly enigmatic creatures in his book Flying Saucers on the Attack, one of ufology's early classics. In mid-February 1953, the administrator of a Los Angeles law firm dedicated to tracking missing persons stated that two weird-looking men, standing 6'2" (188 cm), who had been given temporary work by the firm's legal director, had vanished without a trace. The administrator went on to say that the emaciated pair, clad in ill-fitting clothes and with bluish-green complexions, also had prick ears of the sort seen on certain breeds of dogs.

On 20 January 1953, these two men were given an assignment to help in the tracing of missing persons. Their efficiency in this endeavour was such that the other tracers were astounded. The administrator also noted that on one occasion, one of the beings leaned over the top of a steel cabinet and scored an indentation at least a half inch deep on its surface, using his "oddly curved hand" to do so.

Wilkins' description of the entities doesn't stop there: both creatures had jointless hands and wrists of decidedly non-human curvature. The law firm thought it best to notify the FBI, but the strange pair had disappeared before the agents arrived on the scene. Aside from the testimony of the firm's administrator and legal director, the only evidence left behind by the creatures was the furrow in the steel filing cabinet, which was taken to a metallurgical chemist for analysis. The chemist's report stated that a pressure of at least 2000 pounds per square inch would have been necessary to produce such an indentation.

It is worth noting that mystery beings belonging to no particularly definable group have been with us since the earliest days of human history, standing out on account of their very uniqueness, such as the Minotaur of Greek mythology.

The writings of Roman chroniclers such as Aulus Gelius, Julius Obsequens, and Pliny the Elder often mention extraordinary creatures – almost always vaguely humanoid – whose sudden appearance would spread fear among the population and which were considered to be harbingers of great changes or disasters. The Aztec chronicles echo this sentiment in their description of the Tlacantzollis or "divided men" who were captured and taken to emperor Moctezuma's house of sorcery, where the beings vanished before the startled eyes of the monarch and his courtiers. More recently, according to the July 1993 issue of Uruguay's Paradigmas magazine, the residents of the community of Rivera, located to the north of Montevideo, the nation's capital, lived in terror of a creature resembling the legendary werewolf, especially after two attacks were reported. The first victim was attacked at night, when she got off work. The wolf creature, denominated "lobizón" by the locals, tore her dress and ran its claws across her chest, leaving deep claw marks. The second victim, who has also chosen to remain anonymous in the face of the "deep shame" she has experienced, was apparently sexually assaulted by the lobizón.

The local police went to great lengths to deny the existence of any supernatural creatures, and have cast doubt even upon the injured victims' suffering. The eldest residents of the area, however, made the sign of the cross whenever the subject was broached and even recited a number of prayers whose purpose was that of warding off the evil creature.

The legendary Springheel Jack, whose apparition at the beginning and at the end of the 19th century created a stir in Victorian England, also falls into this category. The degree of fear caused by this unknown entity was such that even the elderly Duke of Wellington, who vanquished Napoleon at Waterloo, rode out at night with two pistols in hopes of dispatching the Public Enemy Number One of his time.

The Red Man, whose visits to King Charles of Sweden and to Napoleon himself marked crucial moments in the lives of both monarchs, also appears to have been another card in the deck of strange beings. But the question still remains unanswered: Who or what are these mysterious creatures?

Spanish researcher Salvador Freixedo described a singular case, which revolved around the love affair between a well-to-do Venezuelan woman named Lula and a thoroughly unusual man known only as Jorge, in his book La Granja Humana. After a courtship laden with supernatural events, the couple married, and the strange man proved to be a wonderful husband, although he remained particularly adamant about not discussing his origins, relatives or livelihood. Lula jokingly accused him of not being human – a charge which Jorge never really denied. For her peace of mind and that of her relatives, he said that he was the son of Argentinian immigrants, and the owner of a small printing shop that never seemed to transact any business. The couple's friends testified to Jorge's astounding powers of precognition – he could accurately foretell the future to the extent of adjusting his behavior beforehand. He possessed superhuman physical prowess, doing things that would have proven lethal for a normal person. Jorge would go to the beach on the worst possible days, challenging the waves and swimming miles away from the shore to the distress of lifeguards. Upon emerging from the water hours later, he would gallop at full speed up and down the length of the beach, to the amazement of onlookers. People driving along the road opposite the shore would stop their cars to witness the spectacular display of locomotion.

In spite of his prowess, Jorge's health was far from good. He would complain to Lula that the "atmosphere" was killing him, and would often lapse into catatonia, recovering enough to take a whiff from a
